LIQUOR IN IOWA.

A New Phase of the Question. At the Iowa state convention of the druggists last week, a subject came up which promises to lead to important results. Iowa is a prohibition state, her citizens having concluded to try that plan of fighting the evils of the traffic They seem determined to give it a very effectual trial, notwithstanding the many obstacles that have been cast in their

According to the laws there now, there is no place where liquor can be legally and openly sold except in the drug stores. It thus happens that while a very large body of honorable druggists are doing a legitimate business, there are a great many who are not and who have brought reproach upon the entire fraternity by violating the law. To such an extent has this gone that all manner of thrusts are made at druggists, by former saloon keepers, by theater people, by the newspapers and by people in general, that the drug store has supplanted the saloon, but that the business of drinking liquor for the supposed pleasure of it still goes on, all the same. The prohibitionist is represented as nosing around the back door in search of violations, while the old-time drinker, sick with a sickness that only a case of beer will eleminate, gets angry if the druggist will not fill his "prescription."

duty under the law. Well, in the convention, a large part of the druggists, led by Norman Lichty, of Des Moines, endeavored to have the association declare in favor of asking the next legislature to take the sale of liquors entirely out of the hands of the druggists of the state. They were not numerous enough for this, but they purpose keeping up the agitation until they citizens of the United States by filing
