Of course, no man has any sort of right to get drunk, but those who are mean when they get boozy ought es pecially to avoid it because they are very apt to have some bitter experience, as a consequence, as for instance: a commer cial traveler for a well-known Omaha firm got on a dummy last Friday, in a mandlin condition, and when the conductor asked him for his ticket he pretended he had already given it to him. The conductor insisted he had not, and the drummer commenced to curse him in a most vile manner in the presence of a number of ladies. The conductor at first was very gentlemanly, but when the drunken fellow persisted in his abuse. the knight of the punch seized him by the collar and hustled him off the train The fellow attempted to get back on again, and the conductor pushed him off. The drummer fell on his face, the corner of a tie sticking him in the eve. It is thought he will loose the sight of that optic. So says the Bee. There are Wednesday of last week for a short visit.
