The people of Schuyler want to know what we have laws for? What we have a police force for? What we have a police judge for? Indications would point out that they were only ornaments the city afforded at the expense of the taxpayers.

When Rev. Creighton began his speech the other evening he declared that he was a republican—out on a strike. Some one in the audience, doubtless having in mind the fact that the third-party movement is virtually an ally (temporary at least), of the democracy, yelled,—out on a foul.

Many of those in attendance on the convention last week were not aware that Columbus was so large a place, and that it was so far along with public improvements. The street cars, especially, were a surprise to many of them.

And some one's treasure must soon be laid to sleep in that bed of mud. He dimpled fingers, laid his long tangle, Clipped over the heart so cold.

The "only a little child" you say? Yet a mother alone may know How her empty arms and heart must ache For those little ones when they go.

The someone's darling, whose dimpled feet The path to heaven had trod, Whose mamma was waiting of love and rest In the "palace of our God."

Mr. Bryan stated that the chairman of the state central committee is receiving eight or ten letters a day announcing the coming of a republican into the democratic fold. At that rate, etc. Now, let it be supposed, for the sake of the argument, that that statement is true, it would take more days, many times over, than there are between now and election day, to convert the republican majority in Nebraska into a democratic supremacy.

Mr. Smith long ago began to feel the effects of an army life and more especially of a term at Libby and Andersonville prisons, where he was four months and three months and ten days, respectively. We related to Mr. S. an instance of one of the boys of our acquaintance, hearty and strong when he went to Andersonville and a mere matter of bones and skin when he came from there, so weakened by starvation and abuse that he scarcely had strength to live, and memory was so strong upon him that for a year afterwards he could not bear unmoved the sight of bread thrown to chickens. Mr. Smith said that to this day, many years after his prison life, if he should begin to speak of those times, his recollection of the hardships was so vivid that it was almost unendurable.

Adjourned to August 18th. The institute. The county institute now in session starts out with flattering prospects. The enrollment on Tuesday morning reached seventy. All parts of the county are represented. More are yet to arrive, and those observant in such matters say that the attendance will pass one hundred very considerably. The older teachers of the county are in attendance in larger numbers than usual, and many younger persons are present looking forward to the work.

Prof. Knepfer has taken hold of the work in a masterly manner, and handles matters with that neatness and skill which experience gives. The teachers are deeply interested in his manner of handling the affairs of the institute. He is a man of unusual ability, and of a free and open manner that invites to confidence. His work all bears directly on the county schools and the trials and perplexities they encounter, and his vast experience gives a peculiar value to his suggestions.

Miss Parker has charge of the reading, and is awakening an interest in this branch of instruction that felt before. She manages her classes in a masterly manner and all are looking forward for good results to follow her efforts.

Miss Louise conducts her department in a pleasing manner, and illustrates the modern methods of primary work in a manner that clears the way for teachers who cannot get abroad to obtain knowledge at the fountain heads. Her work promises to be very successful.

The exercises are interspersed with music led by the pupils themselves, and those observant in such matters say that the attendance will pass one hundred very considerably.
