The body was brought in a box car to the city, and a thorough examination made. There were bruises about the chest and hips and his testicles were crushed; Dr. Heintz is of the opinion that this last injury was the immediate cause of death. When McCray found the body, it was yet warm and froth was

It is difficult to conjecture just how the young man came to his death, whether he had fallen from the car, or whether he tried to board the train and was thrown, or whether he had been murdered, which seems likely, as there was evidence of considerable struggling where the body was found. It has not been so very long since a dead body was found near this same place under some what suspicious circumstances. Two men who were on the ground, saw the man's wounds, etc., declare it as their firm belief that he had been on a train, may be trying to steal a ride, and had been kicked off, while the train was Stack the Flax. S. H. Stevens, flax inspector of the Chicago board of trade, has issued a circular setting forth the reasons why flax should be stacked. Briefly stated they are: neglect or slight delay in housing, depreciates the value, and might be the cause of losing the crop; the solubility of flax seed in water is such that its exposure to rain, however slight, causes decreased weight and essened value, while heavy and continned rains have frequently destroyed all that was left unprotected; the reason why the western cultivator of flax annually breaks down the flax seed market by throwing thereon in sixty days onehalf the crop, and that largely unfit for storage, is the ruinous habit of threshing from the field, for to thresh is to sell; well dried tlax when stacked is reasonably secure, and is in position to yield a good return for labor. The sweat incidental to threshing passes the the circular. The suggestions are good.
