> The attempt of the democrats to make a little late political capital by claiming that the McKinley tariff was void, because the clause relating to the reduction in the tobacco tax was not engrossed in the copy of the bill which the president signed, fell very flat here. In the first place, Representative Bayne, who was one of the conferees on the bill, says the tobacco clause was intentionally left out, as it was not to go into effect until January 1, next; and in the next place its being left out could not possibly affect the rest of the bill. It is common for errors of omission to occur in engrossing long bills, and it excites no comment here. If the omission is important it is corrected by joint resolution of congress, otherwise nothing is the N. E. corner of section 25, and known and done.
