He began a short speech, but had not proceeded far when Mr. Windom gave a short, sharp moan of anguish and fell back in his chair. His face grew purple. His lower limbs stiffened and stretched out under the table. His eyelids opened and shut spasmodically, but there was no gleam of intelligence in the eyes which were rapidly losing the luster of life. The cigar which he had been smoking was held between the grim clinch of the teeth. For only a moment he appeared thus. A cry went up from those sitting

Every eye was turned to the man whose voice had just ceased. As they looked he collapsed in his chair and was falling to the floor. His face was ghastly and a cry of horror arose from the late festive banquetters. What keeps him up, more than anything else, is his energy and his will, still sufficiently strong and vigorous. But those who approach him are sadly struck with all the symptoms of a speedy bodily dissolution. The pope's voice has become thin—so thin; his body, already lean and angular, has become almost transparent; the eyes only are still vivacious and brillfant. He looks like a shadow, "ur 'ombra," a spirit, mournful and sad, wandering through the grand and superb solitude of the vatican. Perhaps he is suffering over the idea that he has not done for the church as intich as he could or would have done. He had grand conceptions, vast schemes; and he had the mind and the heart to realize them. But circumstances were stronger than he. These later years of his pontificate have not corresponded to all the hopes which he entertained in 1878; he feels it himself and is grieved at it Still, it was less through his fault than through those of others that his plans did not succeed. At any rate he continues his receptions He always has on his lips his habitua smile; he does not miss a single cere mony, nd fulfills all the duties of his high office. He wants to prove to others that he is still vigorous: and perhaps he wants to prove it to himself. But nobody in the vaticau entertains any illusion in that respect. I brough the Weary Hours Of many a night, made doubly loug by its protracted agony, the rheumatic sufferer tosses to and fro on his sleepless couch, vainly praying for that rest which only comes by fits and starts. His maindy is one which ordinary medicines too often fail to relieve, but there is ample evidence to prove that the efficient blood depurent, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, affords the rheumatic a reliable means of relief. Check the malady in its incipient stages, when the the malady in its incipient stages, when the first promonitory twinges come on, with this agreeable medicine, an a world years of torture. Whatever be the rationale of the active influence of the Bitters upon this malady, certain it is that no evidence relating to its effect is more direct and positive than that which relates to its action in cases of rheumatism. Like all sterling remedies, however, it deserves a potracted, systematic trial, and should not be also adopted because not at once remedial. It is al andoned because not at once remedial. It is equally efficacious in dyspepsia, indigestion and kindred diseases. Dr. Koch was until ten years ago an bscure country physician.
