-THE JOURNAL may be pardoned a little seeming exultation at the wheat prospects in Nebraska, especially the magnificent yield of winter wheat attested all over the country, whereever given a fair trial. We have urged, and still urge, the sowing of winter wheat with press drills. The most reliable estimates place the wheat yield in Nebraska at 25,000,000 bushels. With the increased acreage, doubtless the yield of 1893 will be far in excess of this year. At present prices, the wheat crop means 13,000,000 or 14,000,000 dollars to help the mortgaged farms.

OUR LETTER FROM "FITZ."

The Land of Cotton-An Aged Negro Over by His Train-Visit to Battle

Fields of Thirty Years Ago. SHILOH, Tenn., Sept. 1, 1892.
To The Journal:—"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," is a good motto, so after a week's hard work in Chicago we boarded the Illinois Central train for the land of cotton, a pleasant trip indeed. Along the lake front, out past the world's fair grounds, the beautiful works of architecture looming up on our left, is a fine sight. Through Illinois to Cairo and over the higherder. linois to Cairo and over the big bridge spanning the Father of Waters, on through Kentucky, until we reach Martin, Tenn., where at 2 a. m., we are aroused from an uncomfortable sleep by loud and prolonged groaning coming from under the car that we occupied. Your correspondent was one of the first out, and was horrified to find that an aged negro had been run over by the cars, and both legs cut off between the feet and knees. Medical assistance was called and as our train stopped but five minutes we cannot give the result. At 7 a. m., we pulled into Grand Junction, Tenn., of which I may mention later. Our next stop was at the old historical town of Corinth, Miss. We are directed to a livery stable owned by a Mr. Burgess, who was seated in an oldfashioned arm chair and a pair of crutches at his side. "Can I get a rig from you to take u over to Shiloh, or Pittsburg Landing?"

I asked. "To Shiloh?" And with a sigh he looks down and drops his left hand on the stump of his left leg that had been amputated at Shiloh 30 years ago. "Willie," to a negro near by, "hitch up the bays and take these people over to Shiloh, and drive right smart so as to get there by sunset."

"Twenty-three miles. Were you ever there before?" "Yes, sir, but it was over thirty years ago, and we went in by the way of Savannah on the north.' "You were in the Union army?"

"How far is it from here?" I asked.

"Well. I was in the Confederate army and lost my leg in that battle," he said. Our rig is ready. We shake hands with our ex-confederate friend, jump into the carriage, the driver "touches up" the team and off we go at a brisk trot. We soon find ourselves on the outskirts of Corinth, the driver pointing of this city, now residing in Omaha, was out to us the many places of interest in in town Friday. Corinth in the summer of '62, of which I will mention later. Eight miles further north finds us in conversation with Mr. Britton, who points out many places of interest. "That house to the right, on yonder hill, was Gen. Halleck's headquarters during his tiresome marches from Shiloh to Corinth. I had a fine home here before the war, but both the rebel and union armies destroyed all, burned houses and barns and we were compelled to take to the woods. Over yonder, not a quarter of a mile away, stood a small town, Monterey, of 200 souls; it, too, was completely wiped out, nothing left but that old vine-covered chimney yonder just beyond that fence near

The country is dotted here and there by fine farms, fields of cotton and corn. A little further on and we are on the outskirts of the historical battle field. We see here many points of interest but we must go clear through to the Landing, from which point we can work nore intelligently.

We are on the old Corinth road, that part of which runs through a very lonesome and dense forest. Now we come to Lick Creek and here we stop to water the horses. The stillness of the evening is broken by the sweet mournful sounds of a church bell just on ahead of us. Ding, dong, ding, dong.-those sweet sounds echo through the forest and over the hundreds of mounds that contain the ashes of unknown soldiers who were hastily thrown into those trenches just after the great
