"FITZS" THIRD LETTER.

He Visits Memphis and Tells in His Own Inimitable Way What He Saw.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 10, 1892. To the Journal:--After a nine days' leasant visit in this, the "Bluff City" of the Mississippi river, we have had a Mrs. F. Reimer is improving after a fair opportunity of seeing the great city severe spell of sickness of several weeks. and pestilence. The prominent part that Memphis took in the late war is already known, but the terrible ravages of the yellow fever epidemics of 1878 Mrs. Beerbower and little son started and '82 cannot ever be fully described last Wednesday for Philadelphia on an to the public. I enquired of many in regard to those epidemics and all claim that they were due to the carelessness of those who were in charge of city affairs in allowing filth of all kinds to accumulate in piles in the streets, alleys and back yards of the city. The several streams that run through the city were sluggish and dammed up in places with lisease-breeding filth, and when the vellow fever made its appearance it was not long in spreading, and soon whole families were down with it, many whole with her mother, Mrs. Marmoy, for two families dying off without the assistance of any one to lend them a helping hand. Nor did this dread disease stop among the poor and lowly, but it visited the mansions of the wealthy with the same result. At this time the inhabitants became panic stricken, and in spite of a vigorous quarantine thousands deserted their homes and left the city, many to die by the roadside, and stricken Memphis was left one vast charnel house, as were, and in charge of a few heroid men and women who willingly sacrificed their lives in comforting the sick and the guest of her cousin, Miss Eulala dying. But today Memphis is restored and the Memphian points with pride to her 50 miles of sewerage, 43 miles of paved streets, her waterworks (artesian) apacity 30,000,000 gallons, paved levee 3,600 feet long and 500 feet wide, her $3,000,000 iron bridge, the third largest n the world, 65 miles of street railroads beautiful parks and cemeteries. "We have the cleanest and healthies rity in the United States and we mean to keep it so," said a prominent merchant to me today.

A visit to the National cemetery will well repay the stranger. It is of the same plan as that at Shiloh and other the dead contains the ashes of 13,773, and this number of tiny white marble slabs are arranged at right angles and from any point can be seen visitors searching here and there in hopes of band, son or brother. But we leave those mourners in their sad searches cemetery that contains the remains of housands of ex-confederates who fought valiantly and hard, and whose last resting place is a large and imposing monument erected to their memory by residents of this county. This cemetery also contains the remains of the dashing confederate cavalryman, Gen. Forrest, whose labors were in vain. We found a visit through the "old town" very interesting. We find most of the streets very engaged earlier in the evening, and class | are surrounded by heavy brick or stone beginning at 7:30 for any who prefer an | walls; all denote the wealth and power earlier hour.
