The fire was in for a public road, was on motion laid over to the room above the hardware store. where the Argus has two printing presses. These rest on a platform raised about six inches above the floor, the space being filled in with saw dust. The fire originated on this platform and near the west wall, but whether by spontaneous combustion or by a stray match and mouse, none may ever know, possibly. The fire was put out without turning on the hose, so that the damage y water was not great. It is remark ble what a prompt and full attendance there always is at a fire, but everybody recognized in this case that the dry weather we have had would make fight ing a big fire up-hill work.

—Doug Bridges, night clerk at the Thurston, was the first to notice the fire n the Gray building Friday morning. The thought struck him that, for some reason or other, the Argus force was get ting to work rather early. A very short time, however, developed the situation, and the alarm was given promptly. Clinton Gray, one of the proprietors, says that he makes it a habit of bonne ing right out of bed at the first alarm o fire, and this habit served him a good turn this time, as but for his being on hand, the probability is that the hardware store beneath would have suffered loss by water.
