

It was Ernest Patterson. Ex-Minister Dallas used to tell the following anecdote of Jerome Bonaparte: He had been playing cards until he had lost all his ready money. He had pledged his rings, and finally had pawned his watch. It was a small gold one, the back of which opened with a spring. A lady overlooking the game, admired the watch and took it up to examine. On her attempting to open the back, Jerome immediately clasped it and said that it must not be done. His wife, who stood by, insisted upon knowing what was in it, and finally bursting into tears, quit the room. Jerome then returned the watch and showed to all present that it contained a beautiful miniature of his first wife (Betsey Patterson), with the remark: "You see, I hope, that I could not with propriety, let her see it." It was notorious that he retained deeply attached to his first wife long after their separation.—Argonaut.

From Flower to Virgil. Some time ago the London Times contained an advertisement for an assistant, "capable of teaching the classics as far as Homer and Virgil." Among the answers received was the following: "Sir, With reference to the advertisement which was inserted in the Times newspaper a few days since, respecting a school assistant, I beg to state that I should be happy to fill that situation, but as most of my friends reside in London, and not knowing how far Homer and Virgil are from town, I beg to state that I should not like to engage to teach the classics farther than Hammersmith or Turnham Green, or, at the very utmost distance, farther than Brentford. Awaiting your reply, I am, sir, etc."

"August Flower"

"One of my neighbors, Mr. John Gilbert, has been sick for a long time. All thought him past recovery. He was horribly emaciated from the action of his liver and kidneys. It is difficult to describe his appearance, and the miserable state of his health at that time. Help from any source seemed impossible. He tried your August Flower and the effect upon him was magical. It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends."—John Gilbert, Hill, Ont.

GLORIA IN EXCELSIS DEO

Colts, in shrill and sturdy warning, "It is now time! It is now time!" In his manly, loud and clear, And the shadowy, misty morning, Is so beautiful, so mocking, Are the spirits in robes of whiteness, Leave their dreams with feet of lightness. As the day-dawn draws near, And their cheeks are like June roses, Their eager search discloses Christmas presents sweet and queer.

Christmas comes but once a year! But to some it does not come. They with remembrance dear, Some are poor and some are weary, Some are sick and some are dying, Only those who love and care, Will his side become a fountain, On the brow of Calvary's mountain, Patient discipline severe, He can read the checkered bread-crumbs, Of the wrong and right unending, Seemingly so to enlighten, The spirit of man's career, But ring bells from every steep, Tell the angels of the people, Christmas gifts the dying year.

Christmas comes but once a year! With its legend of the star, And the presence of the child, Enters ere bold chancellier.

son was faithful to his word, I to my pride. I decided to kill the maiden, so I sent word to her secretly to escape at the first opportunity. She was carefully instructed as to its use and was fastened to the window. She prepared for flight. Then I arranged an infamous trap for her. Listen, Robert! I had the stones of the window sill loosened, so that it would give way beneath her weight, carrying the unfortunate girl with it as it fell, and she would be dashed to pieces upon the marble floor of the courtyard below.

"It was Christmas! That night I fell asleep in the fear of God. Then I was transported to an immensely of clouds. Immense arches followed each other in never ending succession. Beneath these arches small golden lamps were swinging gently and to and fro, so numerous that it would have been difficult to count them. Some burst into flame, others were as suddenly extinguished. Some burned with a fierce light, others flickered for a long time before they died out completely.

"Each one of these lamps was guarded by an angel. All the young faces of unspokeable beauty; by others stood black angels, ugly and evil looking, and those seemed to await with impatience the moment when the flame should be finally extinguished.

"What is all this? I asked my guide. "These lamps are the souls of men," he replied. "The ones which start suddenly into flame are the souls of newborn infants, and spotless angels. Here are the souls of those who have reached the time of life when they can think for themselves, and the Spirit of Evil and the Spirit of Good dispute their possession. Those lamps which are flickering and fading out are the souls of the dying. See!" he cried, pointing out several flames which were on the point of extinction, "see! at the supreme moment the soul always turns to the Spirit of Good."

"Then I asked him to show me my own lamp. "Come," said the strange being who conducted me. "Leading me on through immense arches, we went on and on for a long time. Then stopping suddenly, "See!" he said. "Behold thy soul!" I was petrified with terror. One single drop of oil remained in my lamp, and over it hovered an angel with coal to make it burn out more quickly. I was in a mortal fear, and I was a coward; yes, I was a coward," said the Duke, trembling violently.

"Listen, Robert, listen! Beside my lamp burned another with a waxy and brilliant flame, and white wings watched over the golden flame. The Spirit of Evil came and whispered in my ear."

The Old Duke ceased. It seemed as if he heard the spirit's voice at that moment. His eyes were bloodshot, and a single drop of oil upon the flame. Close to old man's withered hand lay an axe, and the negro would have atoned with his life for a single forgetfulness of his duty.

"My dear Lord, is your suffering worse?" asked Robert, gently. The Duke slithered; he was still listening intently. "It was Christmas night," "Noel! Noel!" sang the peasants' voices. "Noel! Noel!" rang out the chiming. Then the old Duke rose up like a specter.

"Listen, Robert!" he said. "Listen!" The old man had not spoken for twenty years. His sepulchral voice echoed through the great hall and the ancient armor hanging on the walls gave forth a metallic sound. The young Count was petrified with fright. "I was just on the point of going out. And the voice replied, 'It is the soul of thy beloved son.' At that moment the flame went out. The white angel took the soul in its wings and flew away with a cry of grief, but the Spirit of Evil responded with a loud cry of triumph.

"I awoke frozen stiff with horror. Two corpses were stretched out upon the floor of my room—crushed almost out of human shape. My son, notified by his betrothed, had wished to protect her in her flight, and the dreadful trap which I had set for her had killed both. It was Christmas—twenty years ago!"

The old man fell back in his chair, the tears streaming down his face.

A Natural Barometer.

One of the most remarkable geological curiosities (found in any part of the world) is a stone believed to be peculiar to Finland, where it occurs in many localities. Its peculiar property being that of a natural barometer, curiously foretelling, by change of color, the probable character of the weather in the near future. It is known by the name of the sea-mark, and is said to turn black shortly before an approaching rain, while in fine weather it is mottled with white. For a long time it was given to the peasants, who showed it to be a fossil mixed with clay and containing a portion of rock salt and nitre. This fact being known, the explanation of the change was easy; that is, the salt, when the mottled, brown, black when the condensation was favorable for rain, while the dryness of the atmosphere would as naturally bring out the white from the interior of the stone in salt spots on the surface.

Bags and Baggage.

Bags for holding soiled lingerie are made of colored linen and worked in flax threads or cotton, writes Eliza Craven. They may also be very simply arranged by sewing together two towels which have effective borders and deep fringe. The tops of the towels are turned over and a stitching forms a casing in which a ribbon is run to draw up the bag. A stitching must run across the lower part of the bag, thus above the ornamented border; thus the bag is formed. The word "Lingerie" may be worked across in Russian stitch. A traveling case for a sea voyage is made of dark blue linen bound with red and white. Theoretically six pockets, in which brush, comb, slippers, etc., may be placed. One pocket lined with oil silk is necessary for a sponge, and has a flap with a button. A border is left across the top, on which a cushion is sewed in, and embroidered. A useful case for ordinary travel is made of blue linen, bordered with white braid.

The Fascinating Home Gown.

Your gown may be the simplest of cashmere or the most magnificent of brocade and velvet, and all minglings of stuffs are permitted because the house gown is not worn in public and what would be called eccentricities in the other toilets, writes Mrs. Mallon. The soft clinging linenette cloths, especially in black—for black is very popular this year, the suiting that is made of mixture of silk and wool, silk satins, velveteens, not to mention real velvet (if one has the wealth of Ceresus) may be used. Frequently the black tea-gowns have a dash of some color on them, again they are all black, lined with a contrasting color, or they are made of either white or black. One can have the white lace put on at first, and when one tires of it the black can be assumed, producing the always refined and most fashionable all-black effect.

When you have over-estimated yourself by running, jumping, or walking, there is nothing that will relieve the soreness of your joints and muscles so quickly and effectually as a rub over with the greatest care with paraffin.

A Humming Bird.

A correspondent of the Field tells of a humming bird that made its nest on the leaf of a palm, growing in his arched-room in Trinidad, this being the only place where the bird was possible from the fact that the window is frequently used, and a tall floor lamp, which is lighted at night, stands out a few feet from the nest where the little visitor sits undisturbed, even while singing and piping notes. The bird's nest was made of mud and lined with hair. Three tiny eggs have been laid in the nest.

The Police-force in all parts of the country bear out testimony to the great value of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup as a remedy for a cold, cough, and influenza, and all other ailments of the throat.

The Dainty Petticoat.

A very pretty silk skirt is made of soft, light-colored material, by the way, with a pinked flounce of yellow, overlaid with a drapery of black lace, caught here and there with a rosette of black ribbon, writes Mrs. Mallon in the November Ladies' Home Journal. The November Ladies' Home Journal and Women's World are the best sources to realize the dainty done lace when it visits the laundry, are adopting the English fashion of trimming them with a frill of dotted muslin that is not hemmed, but has tiny points outthruated about the lower edge.

Contradictory.

A year or two after our late war Jefferson Davis held a reception at the house of one of his Maryland friends. Here he met many friends who not only sympathized with him in his grief over the fortunes of the south, but also a warm personal feeling for him.

Through the kindness of Horace Greeley and others he had just been released from Fortress Monroe, when he had suffered so long and intensely. Among those who flocked to see him was one John H. Davis, who had evidently a good deal more depth of feeling than orderliness of thought and speech.

When, after quite a long stay, he was about to depart for home, this old gentleman grasped Mr. Davis warmly by the hand and exclaimed, fervently, "Good-bye, Mr. Davis! May you live forever; and when you die, may you die happy!"
