The Improved Stock Breeders Association and the Nebraska Short-horn Breeders Association met in Fremont last week, and were royally entertained by the wide-awake, enterprising citizens. We notice among the printed proceedings that S. M. Barker, a former resident here and a well known man of large experience with sheep, gave his views on feeding, which were listened to with marked attention. He said he came to Nebraska fourteen years ago to raise sheep, but found at that time the state was not a good producing one, and he has since confined his attention to feeding. In his pens the sheep are so plenty of leaving a ton on nothing but hay. Each sheep eats about four and one-half bushels of screenings and corn. He recommends long feeding and thinning the flock, and getting the best money. The next annual meeting of the two associations will be held in this city some time in February, 1894, and will be held in Lincoln, Nebraska. Mr. Barker and R. H. Henry, who were in attendance.

A man named Lockwood was given twenty days in the county jail at Central City, on a charge of stealing from the residence of James Davis, near Clark. He was riding a pretty fine horse when captured. In his possession were found several watches, a new revolver and a quantity of jewelry. He claims that the Grand Island is his home—Albert Smith, the twelve year old son of Mr. Smith, living two miles north of Marquette, had the watch, and he claims his right arm shot off last Thursday, while out hunting with a couple of his brothers—a gun in the hands of one of the latter being discharged through the chest of the boy, and he was a bare wire fence through which the boys were crawling. The arm had to be amputated just a few inches below the shoulder. Dr. A. D. Smith, of Douglas, of Marquette, performing the operation.

Mr. S. O. Raymond died Wednesday, after a protracted illness. The funeral took place from the residence, Rev. Duncan being officiating. She leaves her husband and one son to mourn her departure to the spirit land. An intelligent lady and of a remarkably amiable disposition, Mrs. Raymond's friends were only limited by the number of her acquaintances, for all who knew her loved her, and that affection on the part of her mother needed help, and it is only in the sacred precincts of home and near dear friends that such a character as hers can be justly appreciated. Her death is a heavy loss to the loss that they feel, or mitigate their anguish.

There goes a story the rounds here of two "workers" from Platte county, who have spent considerable time at Lincoln, and approached a legislator to have him be a sponsor for a bill to change the house. If we should tell his name, all his acquaintances would recognize the fact that he is not one of the kind to be readily deceived by such professions of protestations of help. He answered that he was poor, and couldn't even afford to buy a suit of clothes, which a man ought to have before he attempts to run for such a high office. They gave him twenty dollars to buy a suit of clothes, and he declares that he still has the twenty dollars.

If the school districts of Platte were laid out as the law suggests to lay out, the school districts of Platte county, some of the children would not have so far to walk as they do now. His scheme is to lay out the districts in the shape of a cross, and containing five sections of land, the school house to be in the center of the middle section, thus making the greatest distance to be traveled (not including angles) one mile and a half. The plan is well worthy consideration, as is also Mr. Schelp's bill which has passed the house, allowing a pupil of a cross, and the nearest school even of another district, the pay being made out of the state appropriation to his home district.

Senator-elect Allen met with a royal reception last Wednesday evening at Humphrey and at Madison, on his return from the senatorial campaign at Lincoln. One enthusiastic supporter of the crowd at Humphrey exclaimed: "We'll make you president yet," and a democrat yelled: "Hurrah for the first democrat senator of Nebraska!" The band was out and enlivened the scene with good music. Dr. L. Bruen went up to Madison with the new senator, returning on the freight train in the evening. The part of the proceedings at Madison that seemed to eling most tenaciously in his memory was two large Newfoundland dogs carrying flags in their mouths.

C. E. Early has opened out in the rooms in the rear of the First National bank, Twelfth street, this city, as a real estate office. He represents a number of the best, most reliable and strongest companies known in the country, and will transact his business for the best business principles—value received at all times. Mr. Early is a young man well known in this community, and his friends are confident that he will succeed in his new venture. He has been notified of a man who has been noticed loafing around a tough saloon most of the time during the winter, and he is now in the morning she saw the man standing on the corner.

He stared at her in an insulting manner. The brute had evidently carefully planned his work. He had seen both mother and daughter go away in the morning and the latter return alone. He was sure that the honor was his, and that there was no one to prevent him from carrying out his devilish plan, and but for the girl's heroic resistance he would have undoubtedly succeeded in his revenge. He initiated the voice of Mrs. Paynter so successfully that the girl was completely deceived and did not realize what awaited her until she found herself struggling in the lascivious clutches of her brutal assailant. The people in the vicinity are very indignant at the crime, and several of them proclaimed their willingness to assist at a hanging bee if the brute was caught.

One of the men killed by the Indians last week up at Pine Ridge, formerly resided at Bellwood, this county, and was a second cousin to Mr. A. B. Boys of this city. Rodney went up to that country some twelve or thirteen years ago, and went to hunting cattle. He was with the men who were killed, and just the day before cooked dinner for the treacherous devils who did the killing. Mr. Boys received a letter this morning from Bellwood, saying the body would be sent down, and asking him to take charge of the remains upon arrival here. His friends here at Bellwood, and his parents are both buried there. Mr. Boys thinks the body will arrive here over the E. from Fremont on Friday, when it will be taken to Bellwood for burial. On a few days ago Mr. Boys read a letter received from him, and he spoke of the Indians, saying, some thought there would be a war between them. How little he thought then that the treachery surrounding their little camp, and how soon he was to fall a victim to the vindictive race who he was feeding. There is a very little safety for any white man up in that country.—[David City News.]

The little two year old child of John Hartman, while playing with some beans last Tuesday, got one into its mouth and while trying to swallow it, it passed down the windpipe. Drs. McGavren and Peck were called and made every effort to dislodge the bean even to making an open-wound in the throat, but to no avail. It having passed down into the bronchial tubes. At the time of this writing the child is improving rapidly.—[Stroms Herald.]

Brunal Assault. About 7 o'clock Monday last week Mrs. L. B. Paynter (formerly a resident of this city, and sister of Mrs. O. L. Baker), was assaulted by an unknown man, and though the villain was frightened from her purpose, the shock may be too great for the young lady to survive. She is 17 years of age, and lives with her brother and widowed mother at 1102 South Eleventh street, Omaha. She and her mother had been on Monday calling on some friends, and Miss Lotta returned to the house alone, her mother remaining up town to order some groceries.

As the clock struck midnight, she supposed was her mother's voice calling to her from the back yard. The back steps being covered with ice, she slipped and fell, and in falling, she stepped in her assistance. When she reached the porch, she was seized from behind by a man, who threw one arm around her waist and placing his left hand over her mouth, lifted her from her feet and carried her toward the coal shed, behind the house.

As she attempted to scream, but the scoundrel clutched her throat and threatened death if she made an outcry. By this time her assailant had forced her into the coal shed, and realizing that her honor was at stake, the girl struggled with all her strength against the villain. The bee, from which we condense this account, says that the brute then grasped her by the hair and threw her against the coal bin with such force that she was rendered insensible for some time until she recovered to find herself lying in her own room with her mother bending anxiously over her.

It was just a quarter of an hour after the man called Miss Paynter into the back yard that her mother returned and on going out after a scuttle of coal found her daughter lying unconscious on the floor of the shed. Help was summoned and the house and restoratives applied. It was a long time before she opened her eyes and she remained unconscious most of the time until 10 o'clock. Besides the nervous shock she had suffered she was bruised and sore in several places, and when the thermometer was several degrees below zero, and had she not been discovered just when she was the chances are that she would never have regained consciousness.

Evidently the rascal who perpetrated the assault believed that he had killed her when she faintly uttered a cry, and he escaped without any further effort to carry out his purpose. He was a tall man with no beard except a mustache and was about 30 years of age. He answers the description of a man who has been noticed loafing around a tough saloon most of the time during the winter.

As she left the house in the morning she saw the man standing on the corner. He stared at her in an insulting manner. The brute had evidently carefully planned his work. He had seen both mother and daughter go away in the morning and the latter return alone. He was sure that the honor was his, and that there was no one to prevent him from carrying out his devilish plan, and but for the girl's heroic resistance he would have undoubtedly succeeded in his revenge. ORATION OF OFFICERS AND DELEGATES TO NATIONAL ASSOCIATION.

Home Discipline. EN. JOURNAL.—Since the resignation of Mr. Farmer, Miss Kate Taylor has taken that room in the Third ward. We believe she will be a success as an instructor and disciplinarian, and in order to make it easier for her, some of us parents have resolved that so far as our own children are concerned, they shall be thoroughly corrected at school and more added to it at home, if necessary.

They would earnestly recommend this plan to all the families, for the good of the child as well as of the school. Much transgression at school and in citizenship is often traceable to want of discipline at home.

From the Platte Center Reporter we learn that: Judge Higgins was in town Tuesday; Dr. Okey
