We have endeavored to get the speech but have not been able to do so, and in lieu of it give a very brief summary of its sentiments: There were two propositions, one to have the legisstop. The supposition is that Johnnie lative committee make another effort to get a law passed by which insurance companies would be taxed two per cent on the premiums they received in Nebraska cities and villages in which they do business, the proceeds to go to the local fire department; the other proposition was, to go before the legislature in the hands of the Board of Control to be used at their discretion to assist disabled or indigent firemen. Mr. Cleland's speech was a strong plea for taxing the insurance companies, and he did not think that it would be wise to go before the legislature with two propositions, as this might result in the defeat of both. The matter was finally left entirely with the committee

Their interests and that of the thousand to one in favor of the public. and our information in regard to the matter is that, not only in Columbus, but elsewhere in Nebraska, business men are fully alive to the importance of the work done by the firemen, and, as citizens and city officers, are ready and willing to do what they can to advance their interests.
