A New Way of Treating Jurors. Judge Caldwell of the United States circuit court for the Eighth circuit who will be remembered for his attitude last year in respect to railroads and their employees, has been making another very sensible deliverance.

In a case at Chevenne, when a bailiff was being sworn to take charge of the jury and to keep them together without meat or drink, water excepted, until they should agree upon a verdict, the judge interposed and refused to permit the clerk to administer the oath. He said that jurors performed quite as important functions as judges and should be treated with the same consideration: that in order to perform their duties in telligently they should be afforded every facility for deliberation under conditions of mind and body that will evoke their best judgment; that starving, freezing, deprivation of sleep and denial of all comforts is not the best mode of doing this and that the old methods of treating jurors was cruel, barbarous and inhuman. He then went on to say to the jury that they might retire to their room and if they could not agree before supper they might adjourn and return to their deliberations after they had eaten and He leaves a son, Harry McCormick, so continue to adjourn for meals and sleep until they had agreed upon a verdict or were discharged by the court. It has taken several centuries for judges to arrive at this conclusion, but At Eastern prices. Special discounts
