is brown and bony and a little inclined to be hald. He is a trifle cynical, too, and has accumulated a miscellaneous assortment of strange little ways that must be awfully annoying to his wife. In fact, she says as much in her languid, complaining way.

Carmichiel's work has always been a puzzle to the critics. Lately they have decided that he belongs to the impressionist school, and perhaps those bigfointed, green-eyed women, for which he had occasionally been responsible, do indicate a tendency in that direction. There is nothing of the impreswionist about Carmichiel's earlier paintings, however, and yet you would know that they were his: just as you would know that the indifferent, boredlooking Carmichiel whom you meet in every place worth going to is identical with the threadbare but always delightful fellow who used to paint studies of the Greale girls in the winter

Perhaps, though, you were not among the fortunate number who knew him before he had painted his way into the very heart of Philistia. We were only a small coterie, but our fack of even a bowing acquaintance with fame was a sad trial to most of us. Carmichiel was different, little as you would think it when you see him today. He slept at the Commune that night, and when we opened the door in response to a gentle tap next morning, that it looks we found no one in view except the little Julien, who beat his tiny fingers against the door panel and laughed gleefully up in his young father's face. Little Julien had come to stay.

About Carita? The city is large. Perhaps she went back to the ruffianly husband, or, if not-well, it would not be the first time that the turbid yellow river had been intrusted with a secret. Julien is a fine young fellow, an up-

When I first went into business fifteen years ago-now this, of course, is on the dead quiet-I bought half a dozen pairs of white cotton gloves for 25 cents, and I think the crape for those rosettes cost 50 cents. Every funeral brings me in $6 for gloves and $5 for rosettes for the pall-bearers, and in the last fifteen years I think I have realized about $6,500 on them, and I've still got them almost as good as new.
