AFTER A DESERTER.
BY G. R. HERR'S Jack Sullivan suddenly demanded the mate of the Good Intent, as we were washing up decks one fine morning in the Pacific ocean.

"Where is Jack Sullivan?" was the inquiry passed from one to another of us, in lower tones.

"He isn't at the mast-head," said one, glancing aloft.

"Hold on up there!" said Mr. Manchester. "Hold on! I'll find him myself."

But his calls at the foreturret met with no response. All his searching for Sullivan was vain; and in coming aft his attention was arrested by the absence of the large oil tub, which had been lashed up near the try-works.

"Hello!" he roared, "where's the missing tub, sir?"

"The boy, Bill, is missing, too, sir," said one.

"Anybody else?" inquired the officer, angrily. "Come, make a muster, and let's see how many hands short we are."

Only two—Jack Sullivan and the boy Bill.

wouldn't have troubled myself about Sullivan, he said, "for he is an old hand at sea, and he can take care of himself."

But that he should lead the boy away on a desperate cruise like that is quite another matter. I must do my best to get Bill back again. Of course they started for Fawcett's Island, and it was so smooth a sea that the two were good to reach it. I only hope, for the boy's sake, that the old tub hasn't turned turtle with 'em."

Lying off a short distance with our boats, we attempted to open a parley with an army of barbarians, who crowded down to the beach, armed with war clubs and javelins. Their threatening gestures, as they brandished their weapons, admonished us of what we might expect should we attempt a lodgment in their territory, and a few stones, hurled at us from the shore, warned us to haul off to a safer distance.

"I don't like to give it up without learning something about the fate of the boy," he said as he took a little telescope from under the stern sheets and brought it up to his eye. "As for the boy, he might work for his own salvation, for aught I care. Ha!" he exclaimed, with a sudden lighting up of his face, "the tub's landed, and there's the men are drowned or not. There's the head of it."

A building much larger than the ordinary house of the village stood a short distance inland, and, set on a hillside against the wall, was something dark of an oval form, like an immense shield or target. With the aid of the spy glass this was easily recognized as the bottom of our tub. What appeared to be a little pile of wood near it might well have been composed of the staves, and we at once divined that it had been "shooked" for the sake of the iron hoops, the only part likely to be valued by these barbarians.

The attention of the king was attracted to his children in having left the head exposed to view, as he noticed the little excitement among us in the boats. At a signal from him several men ran to remove it and carry it inside the building. But as they entered the door for that purpose, a figure pushed by them and darted out into the open space with a loud cry and frantic gestures.

"Boy Bill!" said half a dozen voices. He was recognized at a glance. We had no doubt that Sullivan was also

The West Virginia Shingled His House with Them.

That story about the woman who bought a coffin plate engraved with a name different from her own, because, as she said, her husband might die and she might marry a man by that name, and it might be a mistake, is probably apocryphal, says the New York Press.

The captain took Bill's hand, with a tear in his eye, when he stood once more on the ship's deck. He said nothing of punishment for desertion; he did not even reproach him, but left him to his own thoughts.

"Dear, sir," answered the boy. "The ball struck him full in the head."

"Pull ahead, then," was the order, as he laid the boat's head round off-shore. "We've no time to lose, and the ship so close into the rocks, and I'd welcome to his body, if they want it."

BEFORE THE BULL FIGHT.

Chapel Where the Toreros Pray That He May Kill Successfully.

"Now," said my friend, "we will go to the chapel." "The chapel?" "Why, yes, the next room is a small chapel where every torero goes before the fight to pray and ask God and his patron saint that his life be spared, and that he be given the courage and strength to take that of the bull."

"I don't like to give it up without learning something about the fate of the boy," he said as he took a little telescope from under the stern sheets and brought it up to his eye.

CHRONIC RHEUMATISM.
From the Industrial News, Jackson, Mich.

The subject of this sketch is fifty-six years of age, and actively engaged in his business. He has suffered from chronic rheumatism in his shoulder and a few years ago, commenced to have rheumatism in his feet. On taking a slight cold or the least strain, something without apparent cause whatever, the rheumatism would start and he would suffer the most excruciating pains.

He tried the best physicians but without being benefited and no one, several specific remedies tried, but was not helped. About one year and six months ago he read in a paper of a case somewhat similar to his, which was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and concluded to try this remedy.

After taking the first box he felt somewhat better, and after taking the second box the pains entirely disappeared, the distended veins subsided, and he has now over a year been entirely free from all his former troubles and enjoys better health than he has had since his boyhood.

He is now in the employ of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and will gladly corroborate the above statements. His post office address is Lorenzo Keeley, Horton, Jackson County, Michigan.

WHERE HARD TIMES ARE NOT KNOWN.
Described by a St. Paul Paper as the New Star of Liberty.

A correspondent in a communication to the Canadian press, says during the past few weeks much has been said and written of Western Canada, and the new provinces forming it, he has been led to give the subject some inquiry, and he has been shown letters and an illustration of the government from delegates sent out by friends to inspect the country.

One of these delegates who was sent to Western Canada says: "In undertaking to give a description I fear I shall not be able to give it justice, for I hardly know where to begin or when to end. For a plea for my judgment, I will assume that an illustration of the experience of a man who went west from place to place in search of a wife, and finding so many good qualities and attractions, was unable to determine which to choose, so he is looking for a home in Western Canada I like the country well, and two of my boys are going this fall they have since gone, and each has a homestead, where I am satisfied they will do well. The lands which I have seen are far superior in every respect and beyond my expectations. Lakes and streams to be found in all districts abound with innumerable kinds of water fowl, while fish are very abundant. On all sides we see innumerable stacks of grain, proving that the fertility of the soil. On either side of the track can be seen in addition to the grain herds of cattle, horses and flocks of sheep. I have traveled over a great portion of the West, and have seen nothing to compare with this country. One hundred and sixty acres of land are given free to actual settlers, and I saw cases where as high as $20 per acre had been cleared in one year. I do not wish to advise anyone, but as for myself I shall leave as soon as I can arrange my affairs." The agents of the Canadian Government are now at Ottawa, Canada, will be pleased to supply the information to those who are not within reach of an agent.
