After the capture of New Orleans by the fleet of that famous admiral he sent the report of his operations to Washington by the hand of Captain Theodorus Bailey. The captain, innocent of the contents of the report which he bore from his commander, was eagerly welcomed at the capital, and in the presence of Senator Grimes of Iowa was asked by the secretary of the navy to tell the story of the fall of the Crescent City. When Bailey had finished Grimes exclaimed: "Come with me. The account of this great battle must be told on the floor of the

In the senate chamber Capt. Bailey was greeted with emotional cordiality, and members of the house hurried over to listen to his recital of the imposing and stirring events, in which he had taken an important part, leading, as he did, the first division up the river even in advance of Farragut. At the conclusion of his narrative the representatives returned to their chamber with the impulse to give thanks of congress to both Bailey and Farragut, while Senator Grimes instantly arose in the senate for the same purpose. But before the motion was made Secretary Welles had read Farragut's report, which did not refer to Bailey as having led the way, and indeed represented the flect as ascending the river in two columns abreast, himself at the head of one of these. Welles hastened a warning to Grimes, and the senator, in the midst of his eulogium, was obliged to call a halt on the enthusiasm which was sweeping the two houses along. He explained the matter as well as he could to Capt. Bailey, who still sat in the chamber, but naturally that officer went forth filled with humiliation. Afterward Farragut alone received the vote of thanks for the victory, and it was seven years later, and after much correspondence between him and Bailey, that he was brought to see the error which he had committed by inclosing in his report a sketch of the movements as he had originally planned them, but which had been rendered vitally incorrect by a subsequent change in his plans. It was then that he wrote to his wounded subordinate: "My examination of the printed diagram has fully satisfied me of the justice of your appeal. I shall therefore forward to the department a correct sketch of the final attack as we passed up the river.

Wheat was a most magnificent specimen of manhood, and, guided by his intense gaze, I soon singled out among the prisoners the object of it, a man of like proportions himself. In a moment more Wheat had rushed down the bank with outstretched arms, exclaiming: "'Oh, yes, I thought that was you

Will Paint Eiffel Tower. The aesthetes want the Eiffel tower ugly scaffold. The plea was put in when the plans for the exposition of 1900 was first discussed. Unfortunately for them it cannot come down; it is leased to a company whose contract runs for twenty years from the date of building-a good many years yet to come. This was the arrangement to reimburse M. Eiffel. The only thing, therefore, that the commission could do for the aesthetes was to study some means to make the tower more agreeable to their eyes. Two years they have cogitated and have hit upon an idea. They are going to paint the tower from the red-brown it is to silver-white. This is not the small change it may seem, either mechanically, since it will take fifty men two months with 50,000 kilogrammes of paint and the operation must be repeated a second time, or aesthetically, from the earth, it will appear rather against them continually grows to descend from the ether regions. Those that commanded the highest price were of a beef breed, early maturers, of a type that not only takes on more flesh in proportion to the feed consumed than is possible to inferior animals, even with the most scientific feeding, but that developed largely in proportion to the entire carcass those parts that supply the choicest cuts to the butcher.
