Every Column is Bright, Clean and Packed with News

A young man in Nebraska fell desperately in love with a girl in his class at college and desired to declare his love in writing. The World-Herald asks its readers to join in giving him a suitable sentence. Can you make a suitable one from this skeleton?

The Omaha Weekly World-Herald will give a to the person who can fill out the skeleton words in the above sentence most completely by using the following letters:

The 75 persons who come nearest to winning the cash prize but do not win it will each receive the SUNDAY WORLD-HERALD, twenty-four pages every Sunday, one year free.

Every contestant who succeeds in completing as many as 11 of the incomplete words, whether he wins cash or a subscription to the Sunday World-Herald or not, will receive as a premium "Snap Shots" of the Trans-Mississippi exposition, containing about forty excellent half-tone photographic views of the buildings and grounds.

To enter the contest simply write the sentence, legibly, as nearly complete as you can, put after it figures indicating how many words you have completed, and give your name and address. It is required that each competitor send in the same letter with his sentence a year's subscription to the WEEKLY WORLD-HERALD, which is issued in semiweekly sections, at one dollar a year. Those who win the Sunday subscription will also receive the Weekly paper for which they have paid. Residents of Omaha are barred from the contest.

The contest closes February 28th, 1890. In case of a tie the prize money will be equally divided. This offer has been submitted to the postal authorities at Washington and they say it is not objectionable.
