-What next now! It seems that human curiosity is never to be satisfied. Sustenance and health are reckoned at too cheep a rate, and instead of food, pure and simple, human ingenuity has sought out many devices to interfere with the steady, normal flow of the animal spirits, and the gentle workings of the innocent pleasures of life, the wholesomeness of the food plants, etc., the sensibilities. It was finally discovered that the boys had gotten into this condition by inhaling the fumes of gasoline, and some of them have really become gasoline drunkards."

What next!

-Maryville, Missouri, is where it happened this time. The principal of the school undertook to do police work rather than submit to having the school disturbed by two boys whistling loudly in the yard. The professor was assaulted with bricks by two boys named Casey aged 19 and 16 years; one of the missile struck over the eye cutting a long gash and another cut off half of his left ear. Assault with intent to kill is the legal charge against the boys. They were probably boys who had been left to their own devices for a number of years, and who, whether in school or out of it, had never learned to think to advantage to themselves. Prevention is always better than punishment. Boys are not naturally villains, but are generally easily led into devious ways by their elders. It does require an effort and a strong one to save them, but they are worth all it costs and ever so much more. Every ment of its boys.
