British Floot Is Honzed

Westminster Gazette: An amazing the use of the gold. story is told of the hoaxing of a British fleet by "a stupid Irishman" during the recent naval maneuvers. It appears that during an attack on Bere Island by some of the vessels of the "B" fleet the officer of the Hut received instructions from Castletown coast guard station to gather up all telegrams and secret plans, send a man away with the same to hide in a cave and on no account to let them fall into the enemy's hands. With the remainder of his crew he was then to show fight until the last. About an hour after the GOOD SHORT STORIES FOR THE main column passed the trenches the small body of stragglers came along, tired, hungry and footsore. They saw the trenches, but kept on, and when about sixty paces beyond imagine their surprise to receive a welldirected volley from the rear. The first volley claimed Goldman for its victim, a bullet having struck him squarely in the back. He sank to the ground and soon passed away. The last words he uttered were, 'Oa, my wife.' The men stood the insurgents off until the rear guard joined them. Poor Goldman was picked up and carried to the next town, where he was buried by a squad detailed from the dead soldiers' command. They dug a grave under a large tree. The grave finished the men lowered their comrade into it, while Father Gleason said a few words of prayer. The soldier's name and company were then carved upon the tree, the grave covered, taps sounded, a salute fired, and the order to double time given, which was necessary to join the column which had not halted. In my desh in the quartermaster's department I have some things taken from the clothes of Goldman, which will be sent to his relatives in America."

> Commandeering. Commandeering of private property on the part of the Boers began on the first day of the war and has continued ever since, says the National Review. It has been practiced with all the greater gusto that the chief part of it has so far been done at our expense. It will be much less pleasant to the Boers by and by, when it has to be done in their own territory. To drive them out of Natal and Cape Colony would be no less advantageous as a financial than as a military operation. They would then have brought home to them for the first time the terrible price of the struggle they have rushed into. Until they are driven back on their own soil they will not seriously feel the cost of the war. Hitherto, unfortunately, they have been able to live, to a large extent, on the enemy. It will be a very different thing for their war chest when they have to live on themselves. Commandeering is a very wide word in the Boer vocabulary nowadays. There is immense scope for it in the republic, not on the field of war only, but wherever seizable property may happen to be. In the international code of the Boers private property has no existence. Everything that can be laid hold of from a gold mine to a road side store, Rand gold field. It is not often that a belligerent has a chance to loot thirty miles of gold-bearing reef at a stroke. But this fabulous price has not yielded much to the enemy so far. Evidently they cannot work the mines to great advantage, for they have now started an alternative scheme to tax them from thirty to fifty per cent on their gross output. About a dozen of the richest mines on the Rand are being worked under government supervision, ostensibly for account of the owners, but the gold passes, in the first instance, into the treasury, and the reckoning with the owners may Oregon Water Hemlock This is a smooth perennial, with erect or straggling glaucous stems three to six feet high, compound leaves, which spring directly from the ground, white flowers, blooming in July and August, and a fleshy root, which has a muskrat-like odor, and which consists of two very distinct and characteristics parts. The more conspicuous of these is the vertical rootstock, which is from one to six inches long by one or two thick, and is curiously divided into numerou chambers by horizontal partition This rootstock furnishes the bulk of the poison. The other portion of the root consists of solid, fleshy fibers which run along on or just under the surface of the soil, and send off numerous rootlets from beneath. The rootstock rots or dwindles away almost entirely before the seeds m

Turning Off Old Ewes.

When lambs come early in the season and are sold as milk lambs, the dams, if aged, should be sold also soon after the lambs. They will fetch a higher price if sold then when in condition for selling, than if sold later. ing and maturing, while the late sown The better price is secured because of the fact that the market is not overstocked in the early months of summer as it is in the late months of autumn, says the Farmer. But ewes cannot be turned off at such a time unless they are fat. To secure such a result special pains may be necessary in feeding such ewes while nursing their lambs. It may be necessary to use a considerable proportion of barley, rye or corn in the grain given to the dam while she is nursing her lamb. This will prevent that falling off in flesh that is likely to occur during the nursing period unless some means is taken to prevent it. When the lamb is sold it may be necessary to feed a low diet for a few days until the milk flow ceases. The heavy grain ration should then be continued. If there is on hand at the same time a well-grow rape pasture, the said pasture will do the rest. If the rape is well grown it will fatten the dam with but little grain added. If the lambs are late, then the ewes will of necessity be sold in the fall. Here again the rape pasture will make them ready for sale with but little outlay. Sheep owners should try and market stock of this eral constitutions should restrict the class before the winter sets in.

Care of Farm Implement

The rise in the price of implement will bring about one good result if arouses farmers to the importance of taking care of their purchases. The lack of timber in many portions of the prairie states and the poverty of pioneers compelled them at the start to do without some of the buildings considered necessary on an eastern farm. A shack for the shelter of live stock was frequently all that could be afforded by the new settler, and his implements suffered in consequence. Had the improvidence stopped there the results would not have been serious, for in a few years those pioneers and buildings, or had been forced out of business through an ability to cope with conditions. Unfortunately, however, thriftless habits remained when all excuse for such practices had passed away, and today on many Illinois farms we see farm products going to waste and valuable implements exposed to the sun and storm to a degree that would have scandalized the careful New England farmers of a century ago. What would be thought of a housekeeper who would place an expensive range in a leaky shed, or leave sewing machine exposed to the weather, yet that is the kind of caretaking that prevails among many farmers. How often we see the plow left in the furrow over night "so it will be handy" in the morning, or see the reaper, the hay rake or the thresher standing unsheltered in the field. Wagons and carriages experience the same neglect and it does not take long for a collection of dirty, rickety vehicles and rusty implements to thoroughly advertise the shiftlessness of their owner. If high prices would make such farmers provide shelter for their tools and then keep them in good order and repair, they would prove a blessing in disguise to many an agriculturist who now wonders why he doesn't "get along better."

Time of Planting Kafir Corn. Though Kafir corn is a dry country plant, it yet requires a supply of moisture to get it started. If it is planted late it may do well, for it may get rain enough to give it a start. But in most of our years, in the regions where it pays to grow Kafir, in the semi-arid West, the late seeding cannot be expected to get sufficient moisture to last season tests were made at the Oklahoma agricultural college as to the relative benefits of early and late planting. The dates of planting were April 4, 11, 19, 26, May 16, 23, 30, June 6, 13. Each plat contained 5,592 square feet of land. The yields of the plantings were as follows: April 4, 43.2 bushels per acre; April 11, 34.6; April 19, 34.3; April 26, 30.3; May 16, 28.8; May 23, 22.8; May 23, 28.6; May 30, 24.0; June 6, 13.4; June 13, 2.8. It will be seen that the earliest planting gave by all odds the best result, and that the yields were poorer the later the plantings were made, with two exceptions. The June plantings were failures. The early planted grain got the moisture that was needed for fillgrains had to battle with the heat and drouth of midsummer.
