In closing, Mr. Albert emphasized the fact that Gentleman because of the condition of his mind was entitled to the protection of the law provided for all those who are unac countable. And asked the jurors to remember that, otherwise, they must not only be satisfied that the accused was guilty of premeditated, malicious killing, but satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.

J. M. Gondring closed the argumen for the prosecution, his entire speech being animated not only in language but in voice and gesture. A dozen words in regard to the case being decided according to the evidence and the law, preceded an impassioned arraignment of Cornelius and Albert for endeavoring to raise issues in the case that are as false and as black as night, detracting the attention of the jury from the plain facts and law. The real backbone of the free trade propaganda in this country is not the old southern school of politics which takes its notions from Calhoun, but a very much more modern, practical and formidable influence. It is the greed of European Importing ouses and European manufacturers. These persons ache with an incurable envy of the great, rich American market, the greatest and richest market in the world.
