Miss Marian Richardson is visiting her "Tell a good story and stick to i is an old maxim that is illustrated in a story that is going the rounds along the Rialto. A certain well known actor floated into his home one morning about 2 o'clock. The wife of his bosom was waiting up for him. He told her he had been out all the evening with one of their friends, Charlie B., and then related an interesting fairy story of how Charlie had taken a crowd to supper, how funny Charhe had been all the evening how well Charlie looked in his new suit, how he said this, that and the other. After telling a 15 minute story, to which the gentle partner of his joys F. A. Woods of Seward, formerly emand out of work periods listened with plloyed in the Snow store, was in town respectful attention, but cynical mien, he paused for breath. Then she, in a confident now I've got you tone, said: "That's a lovely romance you've been giving me, and I hate to spoil it, but Charlie has been here nearly all the evening waiting to see you about an engagement. He left only about half an hour ago."

The teller of the tale looked rather struck. Then quickly gathering himself together he assumed a bold front, with hands in his pockets, head thrown from here for Chicago, where they spend back and, in defiant innocence and emphasizing each word, said: "Well, that's my story, and I'm not Misses Ruby Rickly, Mary Morse and
