SENT BACK FOR THE PURSE.

Business Used an Empty Pocketbook, a Salesman in one of the large dry goods stores the other day thought he would have a little fun with it. He therefore placed it on the counter. Half concealed by the goods lying on it. Presently a shopper entered. Her eyes lit on the wallet as by instinct, and while pricing half a score of articles she endeavored to cover it—quite unconsciously, of course—now with her hands, then with her umbrella. The salesman, without appearing to notice her actions, each time removed the pocketbook out of danger and into light. Finally she adopted new tactics and picked it up, with the comment: "What a pretty little purse!"

"Yes," replied the clerk interrogatively. "Thank you." And he took the leather and slipped it with it for a moment. Upon his return the woman asked, with a slight air of interest: "Was there much in it?"

"Only 25," replied the salesman. "The woman went out. In ten or fifteen minutes a boy came in and asked: "Was a pocketbook with $3 found here this morning?"

"Yes," replied the salesman, "but it has been called for."

"Oh," said the boy and retired. And the salesman smiled audibly.—Chicago Tribune.

THE SUGAR CANE.

It is the Arabs—those great caravans between the east and west—who introduced the cane in the middle ages into Egypt, Sicily and the south of Spain, where it flourished abundantly until West Indian slavery drove it out of the field for a time and sent the trade in sugar to Jamaica and Cuba.

Early in the sixteenth century the cane was taken from Sicily to Madeira and the Canaries. Thence it found its way to Brazil and Mexico, to Jamaica and Haiti. Cane sugar was well known in Italy about the second century and has been common in England since the Tudor period. The strenuous days of great Elizabeth had sugar for their sack, and ginger was hot for the mouth, too, as we all well remember.—Cornhill Magazine.

SHORT WINDED.

Breathless consists of two rhythmic alternating processes—inhaling, in which the muscles of the chest play their part, and outbreathing, in which the elasticity of the lungs and the weight of the chest force out air. The number of breaths, which varies with the age, is one to every three or four pulses here. In the adult it is only about one-sixth of the air in the lungs is renewed, but in exercise the amount is considerably increased and the number of breaths multiplied.

In disease such as reduction of lung area the blood is in danger of becoming overcharged with carbonic acid, and the lungs struggle to get rid of this and to bring in more oxygen. Exercise causes a similar change, and if of the right sort and not too long continued the circulation and breathing are quickened, and the result is good.

In severe cases, and as long continued speed trials, the quickened breathing can no longer cope with its task, so carbonic acid accumulates faster than the heart and the lungs can deal with it, and breathlessness results.

Some Chinese Bards. A traveler in Mongolia writes: "There are some hot springs by the road about twenty miles north of Chingping. The place is named Tang-shan. The arrangements for those anxious to benefit by their healing properties are very primitive. A row of twenty or thirty wooden boxes the top of an ordinary packing case are ranged beside the road. In these sit bathers of every age and both sexes, with their heads protruding. Attendants with buckets continuously refill the boxes from the springs. For less luxurious bathers there is accommodation in a pool which has been dug close by. In this they squat, scooping up the water and pouring it over their heads with brass basins. It is curious to reflect that establishments like Homberg and Aix-les-Bains have had their origin in such beginnings."

Beetle Soldiers and Soldiers. There are beetles in England, of the family known to scientists as telephorids, that are popularly called soldiers and are, the red species being called by the former name and the blue species by the latter. These beetles are among the most quarrelsome of insects and fight to the death on the least provocation. It has long been the custom among English boys to catch and engage my countrymen and the blue species by the latter. They are as ready for battle as gamecocks, and the victor will both kill and eat his antagonist.—St. Nicholas.

Looking on the Bright Side. The lesson which I have learned in life, which I impress on me daily and more deeply as I grow old, is the lesson of good will and good hope. I believe that today is better than yesterday and that tomorrow will be better than today. I believe that in spite of so many errors and wrongs and even crimes my countrymen and the blue species by the latter. They are as ready for battle as gamecocks, and the victor will both kill and eat his antagonist.—St. Nicholas.

A HASTY TEMPER.

The Harm It Does Even Though the City Fit Be Soon Over.

It is a remarkable thing that there exists in people's minds a distinct social precedence among the sexes.

To own oneself on intimate terms with such a one as deceit or slander, or instance, would be almost unendurable, but how often have we heard people say, almost with pride, at any rate with no trace of shame, "I have a very hasty temper."

And then as if to transfigure it into a very virtue they triumphantly add, "But it is soon over." So it may be, but how about its consequences? Are they soon over?

There are few more dangerous enemies to the peace and comfort of everyday life than the people who speak hastily in the squalls of passing ill temper, and then, when they are restored to good humor, expect everything to be just as it was before. There is no such position possible as "just as it was before" in the up and down hill human nature of ours. Every act or word is a step by which we mount upward or sink lower in the unhindered journeyings onward of all the conditions of life, and the people who give utterance to the incriminations of passionate tempers are unthinkingly dropping down in the estimation of others, from which it is a stiff climb up again.

Moreover, words once uttered, whether true or false, are usually undying and live on in hearts and memories long after the careless bow that shot such poisoned arrows forth is forgotten. And though the utterer may plead that to feed his passion he said not what he really believed, but what he thought at the time would hurt most, it is almost impossible for the hearer to understand that the expression was not that of a living though latent opinion and to feel it accordingly.

The code of fashion in the moral realm has decreed how much better a passionate temper is than a sulky one, but there is something to be said in favor of the latter in that it only hurts itself. Like the little girl who when annoyed always at her apple tart with outstretched hand, the guilty person may suffer most individually, but that is surely better than the suffering to the innocent caused by the random shots of the fierce though short onslaughts of a hasty temper. And silence is much less generally disturbing than violence, though perhaps quite as unbecoming.—Edith E. Fowler in London Mail.

A Complainer.

Young Matron (with theories on the care of children, to nurse—Jane Nurse Yes—sum. Young Matron—When the baby has finished his bottle, lay him in the cradle on his right side. After eating a child should always lie on the right side; that relieves the pressure on the heart. Still (reflectively) the liver is on the right side; perhaps, after all, you had better lay him on the left side. No, I am sure the treatise on infant digestion said right side. On the whole, Jane, you may lay the baby on his back until I have looked up the matter more thoroughly."

The Only Obligation. A story that comes from a country region not far from New York concerns a native who was seen strolling plowing a field with a team of weary and dejected horses. As they approached the observer of rural life remarked sympathetically that the horses "didn't seem to like the work."

"Um," commented the farmer briefly, "they don't have to like it. They only have to do it."—Harper's Weekly.
