We learn of an altercation taking place yesterday between S. C. Smith and a Pawnee Indian, on Mr. Smith's farm near the reserve. It seems that some Pawnee ponies had committed trespass upon one of Mr. Smith's corn fields and the brave objected to paying damages and receiving their ponies back desired very strongly to ride off on the aforementioned ponies without paying for feed. Pistols and strong language helped to make one of those exciting incidents of pioneer life.

At a meeting of the citizens on Saturday evening, at which H. P. Coolidge presided, the following report was received and adopted as expressive of the sentiments of those present, to incorporate Columbus, after giving the boundaries of the place, use this exact language: "The only question which remains for consideration is this: has the town council of Columbus, that is, those who acted as such, prior to the spring election of 1870, by its failure to act as such, been guilty of the crime of neglect? None of them has resigned; none of them has been impeached; none of them has been superseded by a successor and therefore, in our opinion, the town council of 1869 is the legal, regularly constituted authority. Signed by the committee appointed to investigate the legal situation of the place in which we live, S. L. Holman, J. P. Becker and M. K. Turner.

CAUSTIC CARLYLE

The Contempt For Great Men Was Subject to Modification.

Carlyle's opinion of Herbert Spencer as "the most unending ass in Christendom" must, of course, be read in conjunction with Carlyle's decision for mankind in general. "Mostly fools," he cheerfully thought of us all. Darwin, we know, he would not have at any price—not a word of him. Cardinal Newman, he estimated, had "the brain of a medium sized rabbit." Ruskin was a bottle of soda water. "A bad young man" was his sum up of another eminent writer.

But these hostile phrases were subject to considerable modification if the man against whom they were aimed came near enough to Carlyle to do him a personal favor, even to pay him a personal compliment. Darnell, whom he had described as a mountebank dancing upon John Bull's stomach, of course Carlyle's character and decided from him, together with a refusal of the title, many tributes to his magnanimity. He said, very little about Darnell henceforth in print, and in private he spoke of him only as "a very logical comical fellow."—London Chronicle.

THE ONION CURE.
A Remedy Which is Claimed to Be Infallible in Pains.

This remedy, which is claimed to be infallible, was formulated many years ago by a well known physician in New England, who never lost a patient by this scourge. Take six or ten onions, according to size, and chop fine. Put in a large spider over a hot fire, adding about the same quantity of dry meal and vinegar to form a stiff paste. Stir thoroughly and simmer five or ten minutes. Put into a cotton bag large enough to cover the lungs and apply to chest just as hot as the patient can bear it. In about ten minutes change position, and then continue reheating and applying, and in a few hours the patient will be out of danger. And just here a word of caution. In applying this or any other hot poultice care must be exercised not to let the patient go to sleep during the changing process. Have the hot one all ready to go on before the cooling one is removed, and make the exchanges as swiftly and deftly that there is not a moment's exposure of the body surface, which becomes exceedingly sensitive to a chill.

POSITION DURING SLEEP.
Slightly Raise the Head and Lie on the Right Side.

The main object of sleep is that every organ of the body should have perfect rest. The brain, the lungs and the heart have been, not inappropriately, called the "tripod of life," as upon them hangs the prosperity of the whole frame; hence we slightly raise the head and check the flow of blood to the brain and more or less quickly find out the position of greatest ease for lungs and heart.

This will be found by sleeping for the greater part of the time on the right side, for nearly two-thirds of the heart is on the left of the medial line, and the apex points closely to the left. Let the feet, therefore, be turned and feet possible should be given to the left side.

A quiet place, diminished respiration and refreshing rest are all combined when open windows, moderate warmth and unobtrusive work together. It is often best to court sleep on the left side and turn to the right before going off.

A Philanthropist.
Modern agriculture can cope even with the exigencies of courts. A London journal tells us that a young American woman wished to be presented at the court of the king of Saxony. The high officials, having inquired into her social status, as a housewife and a mother, were well pleased. They represented to her that the king could scarcely receive the daughter of a retail bootmaker. The young woman calmed home and told her father the situation. The next morning she received his answer: "Call it is selling. Practically giving them away. See advertisement."

That solved the difficulty. She was presented as the daughter of an eminent philanthropist.

HABERDASHER.
The Word is Supposed to Mean Things of Little Value.

The word haberdasher first appears in the language as coming from hapertas, the name of a fabric mentioned in the Liber Albus along with wool, canvas and felt, as subject to customs duty, about 1419. A parallel and almost contemporary list has haberdasherie.

The word is supposed to mean things of little value—small wares such as buttons and tapes. Street derives it from the Icelandic haberdask—trumpery, pedlar's wares. In a register of burials of Ware in 1655 we have one "William Wharling, London, haberdasher of hats," probably this being the first material of which hats were made.

Chambers gives another meaning to the word. He says it is derived from the ancient name for a neck cloth, which is derived from beard, and tache, a covering.

Hapertas was originally a cloth of a particular kind, the width of which was settled by Magna Charta. Hence a haberdasher was the seller of haberdasherie.—London Answers.

THE LUDDITES.
Authors of the Famous Stocking Frame Riots in England.

Early in 1811 bands of distressed stocking knitters in Nottinghamshire began a long series of riots, marked by most wanton mischief. Assembling in parties of from six to sixty under a leader styled general or Ned Ludd, disguised and armed with swords, pistols, hammers and axes and bound together by illegal oaths, they succeeded in wrecking stocking frames in all parts of England, and their daring outrages continued even when a large military force was brought into the neighborhood and two London police magistrates came down to assist the civil power.

To such a pitch had this dangerous disturbance grown that a royal proclamation was issued offering a reward of £50 for the apprehension of any of the offenders. Not until October, 1816, did this wholesale destruction and violence cease, by which time more than a thousand frames and many lace machines had been broken up and the mischief had spread into neighboring counties.—London Chronicle.

When a man has his picture taken with his family he shows on his photographic face that he was forced into it.

VARIOUS WAYS OF WORKING.

All Men Can Not Follow Same Methods in Their Labor.
We are not all built alike; what is one man's pleasure is another man's pain. It is impossible for a one-horse power engine to do the work of a ton horse power engine.

I have a cousin who says his best work is done when he has to do a day's work in a couple of hours. I think my best work is done when I have a month in which to do a couple of hours' work.

Practice is absolutely necessary. Some never have been obliged to accomplish a definite amount of work each day. If you are forced into a narrow path you are likely to accomplish more definite results than you are if you stroll on the boulevard.

A manager of a jobbing house says he can do four times the work now than when he commenced business with a narrow path. This is due to practice and to limitations in time. He has improved involuntarily because his work forced him ahead.—Earl M. Pratt.

ROSE HAS MANY COLORS.
Peculiar Flower the Production of Eastern Gardeners.

The Chinese, Japanese and Siamese are peculiarly skillful at botanical feats. One of their wonderful achievements is known as the "changeable rose." The bloom is white in the shade and red in the sunlight. After night or in a dark room this curiosity of the rose family is a pure waxy-white blossom. When transferred to the open air the transformation immediately steps in the time of the entire change of the flower from white to red depending on the degree of sunlight or warmth. First the petals take on a kind of washed or faded blue color, and rapidly change to a faint bluish of pink. The pink gradually deepens in hue until you find that your waxy white rose of an hour before is as red as the reddest peony that ever bloomed.

Size of World's Mail.
The International Postal Union, formed by the Postal Congress, held at Bern on Sept. 15, 1874, now extends over forty million square miles of territory, peopled by one billion one hundred million persons. The number of pieces of mail handled in 1900 amounted to about eighty millions a day (twenty-nine billions a year). The chief terms were: Letters, 11,000,000,000; post cards, 3,300,000,000; printed matter and samples, 14,000,000,000. The mail routes had an aggregate length of 1,844,000,000 miles, about twenty times the distance of the earth from the sun.

Japanese Medicines.
According to the Chemist and Druggist, the native drug stores in Japan are still largely stocked with dried snakes, toads, lizards, crabs, etc., in quantities of which are the popular household remedies throughout the country. Various "secret remedies," which are supposed to be as universal and potent in their curative effects as many of our Western patent medicines, also abound. Magic plasters are much in vogue, and massage is largely practiced, the operators being chiefly blind people. Face paints and powders may also be seen on the shelves.

Another Man Ahead of Him.
An Irishman who had been out of a job many weeks found in the river that flowed through his town the body of the keeper of the railroad drawbridge. He immediately betook himself to the superintendent of the division and applied for the vacant job, saying that he had seen the body of the former keeper in the river. "Sorry," said the superintendent, briefly, "the place has been filled. We gave it to the man who saw him fall in."—Harper's Weekly.

Old Belief Knocked Out.
A recent writer has pointed out of the most complete misapprehensions with regard to the voices of birds and oases when we listen to the monotonous caw of the "restful turtle dove."

By no means a musical sound in itself, yet it is so bound up in our minds with the happy dream of summer afternoons that we imagine the sitting dove as crooning to herself from sheer contentment with her lot. Very different is the reality. That drowsy monotonous is the voice of the male dove. Usually he is giving peremptory orders to his wife to get off the nest, in order that he may take her place, and is also hesitating to obey her enforces his commands with sharp pecks upon the head. At other times he seems merely to order her off the nest for the pleasure of witnessing her devotion to his person.

Advice.
My dad, he likes to give advice—he says: "Steer clear of debt. And also you must leave alone the deadly cigarettes."

"Don't drink," he says, "and fight real shy of love affairs and such. And don't make any new-found friend a subject for a touch."

My dad is wise. I know he is. He speaks the truth, and yet, I know that famous authors smoke the wicked cigarette. They don't care. Usually every one who ever made things go. Can't he start to money that somebody let him over.

The biggest men in Congress are the gentlemen who think that one can safely tamper with intoxicating drink. Perhaps they're bad examples, though—the fellows with the price who don't care how they ever win, against my dad's advice.—Cleveland Leader.

Try the Non-Nicotine. A scientific production of Cigarettes. Sold under the United States and the English patents. Try one of them. july30-31 CHARLES H. DACK.
