It is related that Daniel Webster once acquired a comfortable jag, and, strolling into his accustomed place in the United States senate, was moved to address that august body on the question then pending. Having occasion in the course of his remarks to illustrate the in significance of the national debt, he pulled out an old wallet that looked as though an elephant had stepped on it, and remarked in his thunderous tones: "The national debt ? Who speaks of the national debt ? I will now pay it myself." If the gentleman who denies the existence of the Platte county deficit will be so good as to make a similar offer, his argument would be rather more convincing than it has been up to date.

JOSEPH G. CANNON.

Next to the president, the official exeroising the greatest power in the United States government is the speaker of the house of representatives. His power over the legislation of the country is absolute, in a negative way. The president can veto a law, but a two-thirds rote of both houses of congress may pass it in spite of him. If the speaker of the house puts his unwritten veto on a proposed law, it is all over. That law will not be passed.

As has been said by one of the presentday political writers, there has come about a surious exchange of the functions of the executive and logislative branches of the government, as contemplated by the constitution. Presidentia appointments are nowadays largely made by senators and congressmen and ratified by the president. In the matter of legislation, on the other hand, the president proposes and congress disposed And the one man who can absolutely prevent any and all legislation which the administration may desire is the speaker of the house.

It is natural that this place of exalted power should be held by the most forcible and picturesque characters of American politics. Uncle Joe Cannon is a worthy successor to the throne which has been occupied by Clay, Blaine, Randall and Reed. When he has anything to say he says it right out in meeting. He does not traffic extensively in the flowers of speech, but as a rough and ready, of the home-spun variety, he has no equal.

The man who is second only to the president of the United States is a bigger factor in world power than any Kaiser or King, and when he comes to Columbas on September 28 it will be a big day. Every citizen, regardless of politics, will want to see and hear this plain American citizen and learn why it is that people call him great.
