Someone handy with figures has added the information that the time a young man puts in at acquiring an education is worth $10 per day, which is certainly not a meager salary. The average educated man commands a salary of $1,000 a year, it is argued, while the day laborer, at 1.50 per day, makes $540 a year, working 300 days. Working forty years, the educated man commands $40,000, while the common laborer earns $18,000 in his life time. Twelve years of school is said to be sufficient to bring the educated man's salary, and the difference of $22,000 in a life time is said to pay at the rate of $10 per day for the 2,160 school days put in at study. It is a neat argument and a timely one at this season when it is again shown that a small number of boys are members of the graduating classes in comparison with the number of girls who have completed their high school education. It would seem that the young men and their parents should be willing to stretch a lone point in favor of gaining that which will profit them at the rate of $10 a day.—Norfolk News.

This classification is regarded as a correct one by many students of the classics for Shakespeare's immortal tragedy "Macbeth" for it is full of thrill and continuous interest. Its characters are majestically strenuous and forceful, its climaxes fairly set intelligent audiences wild with enthusiasm and it is a dazzling tale of enchantment in six acts by the great master of dramatic literature, treating of a subject that borders on the occult, and is replete with suggestions of the supernatural. John Griffith the eminent tragedian is the star of this marvelous presentation. He is re-

FIFTY MINERS ENTOMBED

THIRTY-FOUR DEAD AS RESULT OF BLAST IN LEITER MINE.
FIFTEEN BODIES RECOVERED
Accident Due to Accumulation of Gas in Lower Workings Over Sunday. Shaft is Badly Wrecked—Miner on Surface Killed.
Benton, Ill., April 4.—Some fifty miners were entombed in Joseph Leiter's mine at Zeigler by a terrific explosion of gas and it is probable that thirty or more of the buried men are dead. Thus far fifteen bodies have been found. The explosion was due to the fact that the Leiter mines are not worked on Sunday, thus allowing gas to accumulate in the lower workings. When between thirty-five and forty-five miners had descended into the mine to resume work a terrific explosion blew the timbers about the mouth of the mine high into the air. One of the steel cages was blown to the surface from the bottom of a 300-foot shaft. The shock of the explosion was felt at Benton, 12 miles distant. One miner was killed and four were severely injured at the mouth of the shaft in which the explosion occurred. The work of rescue was begun at once by miners who were arriving when the explosion took place, but the main shaft was demolished, so that rescue work has to be carried on through the air shaft. This has hindered the work of aiding the entombed men. A committee of union miners from Duquoin and other neighboring mining towns, headed by District President Morris, hastening to Zeigler soon after the explosion occurred, and offered their aid.
The bodies of the dead are so blackened that they cannot at once be identified. Rolly Campbell is the injured miner brought out of the shaft and it is said that he cannot live. Campbell is conscious, but he is unable to give any explanation of the accident.
The number of dead is estimated at thirty-four, wounded eight. It transpires that there were two explosions close together. The first explosion took place in the air shaft and was followed by a much greater upheaval in the main shaft. Four cages, each containing ten men of the day force, had gone down into the mine and were supposed at the bottom when the catastrophe occurred.
The explosion wrecked the shaft, blowing out the shaft as such the cages were killed. Of the thirty-four men thought to be dead, only fifteen have been taken out. Besides these bodies, three were removed alive, but with fatal injuries. Among the dead are James Ryburn, engineer; J. P. Flak and Willis Campbell. The remainder are Greeks and Lithuanians and were designated by numbers.
There was much excitement among the miners when the accident became known, because there had been a strike of long duration and many conflicts had occurred between strikers and nonunion miners.
Cheated Death.
Kidney trouble often ends fatally, but by choosing the right medicine, E. H. Wolfe, of Bear Grove, Iowa, cheated death. He says: "Two years ago had kidney trouble, which caused me great pain, suffering and anxiety but I took Electric Bitters, which effected a complete cure. I have also found them of great benefit in general debility and nerve trouble, and keep them constantly on hand, since, as I find they have no equal." Chas. H.
