The Chilly House of Commons. A speaker in the house of commons store he found he didn't have any has to address "the most chilling, nerve destroying audience in the world." Even such a cool headed, seasoned orator as John Bright once said, toward the end of his career, too, "I suppose I to have a love-lorn swain chatting ought to be ashamed of myself, but the love-ditties into the epsom salts or fact is that I never rise in the house without a trembling at the knees and a secret wish that somebody else would catch the speaker's eve and enable me to sit down again." And Disraeli, who boasted that he had no nerves, declared: "The blare of trumpets, a thousand lookers on, have induced men to lead a forlorn hope. Ambition and Thursday, where she will be followed one's constituents have induced men by Frank today, when they will both to do a far more desperate thingspeak in the house of commons."-Lon don Mail.

> Going to Bed in India. Going to bed in India is a very difhome. To begin with, it is a far less season no shutting of the door, no cutting yourself off from the outer world, no going upstairs, and, finally, no getting into bed. You merely lie down on your bed, which, with its bedding, is so simple as to be worth describing. The bed is a wooden frame, with a webbing faced across it, and each bed has a thin cotton mat tress. Indian Legend of the Formation of This Pamons Mountain.

The quaint Indian legend of the formation of Pike's peak is as follows: "At the beginning of all things the lesser spirits possessed the earth and dwelt near the banks of the great river. They had created a race of men to be their servants, but these men were far superior to the present in habitants of the earth and made endless trouble for their creators. Therefore the lesser spirits resolved to destroy mankind and the earth itself, so they caused the great river to rise unth it burst its banks and overwhelmed everything. They themselves took each a large portion of the best of the earth that they might create a new world and a quantity of maize, which had been their particular food, and return ed to heaven. Arriving at the gate of beaven, which is at the end of the plains, where the sky and mountains meet, they were told that they could not bring such burdens of earth into heaven. Accordingly they dropped them all then and there. These falling masses made a great heap on the top of the world which extended far above the waters, and this is the origin of Pike's peak, which is thus shown to be directly under the gate of heaven. (It was formerly twice as high as now, but lost its summit, as is told in another legend.) "The rock masses upon it and all about show that they have been dropped from the sky. The variety and extent of the mineral wealth to the region prove that the earth's choicest materials are deposited there. And still as the constellations move across the heavens and vanish above the mountain summits we may see the spirits rise from the great river and pass to the gate of heaven. The falling stars are their falling burdens or the dropping grains of maize,"

CULTIVATE TACT.

If You Do Not Possess It, Strive to Acquire It.

I want it recognized that tact should be taught continuously, seriously, thoroughly; that it should be placed in the forefront of education and take its natural first place side by side with the catechism, writes Frank Danby in Black and White.

A friend of mine recently suffering under a great bereavement was in the receipt of innumerable letters and telegrams from friends, acquaintances and the general public. Out of the 1,140 of such communications two only hit the right note. Among pages of sentimental and religious commonplace two messages alone touched the heart.

"He was a man I loved. I am with you in your grief," was one. The other ran: "You have lost your best pal. He was mine too. God help

Again, paying an afternoon visit recently, my hostess, wanting a book to which our conversation had referred, rang the hell. Within two minutes the servant appeared with tea, and the following colloquy occurred:

"Who told you to bring tea?"

"Please, ma'am, I thought that was what you rang for." "Well, please don't think. I hired you to answer the bell. It wasn't the signal for a guessing competition. When I want you to do that I'll supply the kitchen with a copy of a newspaper."

In Darkest London. In his book, "Child Slaves of Great Britain," Robert H. Sherard writes: "There are thousands of our poor children in London starving not on ac count of the poverty of the parents. but by reason of the ignorance and sloth of the mothers. They know nothing of cookery; they wish to know nothing. They do not care for the trouble. In every London slum you will find a fried fish shop or a cooked meat shop or a grocer who sells cheese and pickles and potted things. It is much easier and 'less worriting like' to send the children out with coppers for a penn'orth of fish and chips or a bit of cheese and pickles than to cook any thing for them."

Vocation and Avocation.

"Avocation" is one of those mafor tunate words that are constantly being used in a wrong sense. Strictly speaking, it refers to something that calls a man away from the ordinary occupa tion of his willy life. If you earn your living by drafting conveyances and interpreting legal subtleties and also are often seen in leisure hours with a camera in your hand and have a dark room at home, the .. the law is your vocation and photography your avocation .- Lon-1on Telegraph.

True Economy.

A LAND OF WONDERS.

The Sightsoor Finds Many Things or Interest in California.

Near this cave are two natural bridges which the tourist can visit and return to the railroad within half an hour. The only natural way to reach these scenes of interest is via "The Overland Limited, Route," comprising the Union Pacific and Southern l'acific, now realy one line.
