A LITTLE NONSENSE.

The Kind of a Cat That Little Helen Liked Best.

Little Helen while on a visit to her grandmother became rather troublesome in her attentions to the household pet.

As these attentions were not always of the gentlest nature, there was a continued protest from the various members of the family. Grandma would say, "Child, don't maud that cat so!" while the next minute a maiden aunt would call in answer to a piteous meow, "Helen, you really must not tease the cat!" and so on, until the little girl grew very familiar with the various forms of protest.

One day grandma came home from a neighborly visit and announced the interesting fact that the Smiths had a large family of Maltese kittens and ended with, "Helen, dear, they say you can have one of them when they are older if you like."

"What kind of kittens did you say, grandma?"

"Maltese. I think they are all Maltese."

"Oh, yes, I'd like one of that kind. Then I can maud and tease it all I want to. Can't I, grandma?"—Lippincott's Magazine.

Fowl Play on Words.

"Willis calls his wife Birdie."
"Making game of her, I see."

A Clash of Opinion.
"There is no satisfying people," said Senator Sorghum plaintively.
"Public opinion is painfully inconsistent."
"What is the matter now?"
"Some people are saying that I need money to get into politics and others that I used politics to get into money."—Washington Star.

Angelina's Yawn.
Augustus (no longer youthful)—Well, there's one comfort—they say at forty a man is either a fool or a physician.
Angelina (yawning)—But you are not a physician.
Augustus—No.
Angelina—Oh!—Tit-Bits.

A Mean Insinuation.
Mrs. Proudleigh—Yes, burglars got into the dining room the other night, found the silver chest and took all the plate away.
Mrs. Sneerwell—Must have left the silver looking rather bare with all the plate taken away.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Too Bad.
Mr. De Style—Don't you think bamboo easels pretty?
Mrs. De Style—Yes; they are so light and airy and delicate and so suggestive of nature in its pristine purity. I think they are lovely, but they're disgustingly cheap.—New York Weekly.

Quite Likely.
"Good intentions, you know, never die," said the man who was fond of quoting things in his own way.
"Indeed?" replied the other.
"Probably that would explain why they're so seldom carried out."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Bifkins—I don't believe it. Nothing on earth could prostrate that fellow's nerve.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Real Wisdom.
"He says he knows all about stocks."
"I guess that's so. At any rate, I never heard of him wasting his money buying any of them."—Philadelphia Press.

Says Little.
Cobwigger—Money talks.
Merritt—It's a pity it couldn't sometimes tell how it was made.—Town Topics.

Poetic.

Tireless Apache & Bloodhounds

How the Red Sleuths Followed "Bad Man" McKinney Over Desert Trails and Brought a Murderer to Justice.

The recent trailing of Outlaw Bud McKinney across hundreds of miles of Arizona desert land to Bakersfield, Cal., where the murderer met death at the hands of a posse, shows that the Apache Indians have not forgotten their old-time skill as man hunters. In the days of Geronimo the American soldiers were many times astonished at the skill of these human bloodhounds in following a trail which would puzzle the sharpest white man. Unerringly the Apaches would paddle across the desert, their soft moccasins making not the least sound, and they would track their quarry even when the surface of the plains apparently showed not the slightest sign of any human being having passed. This faculty still clings to the Apache tribe, as McKinney's case proves.

There live in Arizona several tribes of Indians that are skilled trackers. The Apaches, however, lead all others in this instinct. The Apache is a bloodhound by instinct. He has been taught from infancy to notice tracks and follow trails. They know the track of every animal in the desert, and one glance at a pony track will enable them to pick that particular horse out of a herd of thousands. The same holds true of tracks of men, and nothing but extraordinary good fortune will prevent a white man from being run down when one of these Apaches camps on his trail.

One of the most skilled of all trackers was Apache Kid, the celebrated Indian outlaw, who was supposed to have been killed by a white scout named Clark, but who is said to have reappeared among the Yaqui Indians in Mexico. The "Kid" trailed all his white victims, as it was his favorite method of operation to shoot from behind. He would follow a trail for weeks, sometimes keeping his victim in sight for days, but being unseen himself, until a favorable opportunity arrived for striking. Not only was he one of the most expert trackers of men that ever lived, but he was also expert in throwing white men off the scent. He covered his tracks with the skill of a fox, and time and again, owing to his devilish ingenuity in this regard, he escaped when escape was seemingly impossible. It would have taken one of his own tribesmen to have successfully trailed Apache Kid, but the outlaw was so dreaded among his own kin that not even the brave Apache scouts could be brought to the task of going after this human bloodhound.

One of the most expert trackers of the Southwest was a San Carlos Apache named Josh. Apache Kid had a partner dubbed Amigo, who abducted a woman from the San Carlos reservation. The commander of the fort promised a sargeancy of scouts to Josh if he would kill or capture Amigo, but added the stipulation that if he failed to secure him he would lose his job. Josh accepted the proposition philosophically and disappeared from the fort. For several weeks nothing was heard from him. One day as the commander from him. One day as the commander in his office a shadow fell across his writing desk. As there had been no sound to indicate the approach of any one, the commander at once concluded that it was an Indian. He looked up and saw Josh.

"Did you get him?" asked the colonel.

"Yes, colonel, I got him," answered Josh, imperiously. And then, from out of a sack in his hand rolled the abductor's head on the commander's desk. For weeks the scout had followed the trail of Amigo and at last had secured an opportunity of shooting Apache Kid's partner. It occurred to him that the best proof of his being in line for promotion would be the abductor's head.

This same Josh had rendered valuable assistance to the Arizona rangers under Capt. Burton F. Mossman in trailing desperadoes in the Southwest. Josh and Mossman and a small company of rangers followed the Smith gang of bandits for twenty-two days, after Smith had numbered two of the company of rangers. The weather was at its worst. It rained repeatedly and obliterated the trail and a snowstorm came up that impeded the progress of the pursuers, but Josh found the trail again and again, and for eight days the twenty-two outlaws were pursued so hard that they had to wander homeless in the mountains. Several of them were wounded and only a few of them were able to make their escape, owing largely to the cunning of the Indian tracker.

The work of these trackers is the more remarkable from the fact that outlaws in the Northwest always take to the forest, mountain or skunk in the best of sun-baked mountains with their paroled guides and stogie canons. Even a veteran plainsman fairly familiar with the region will easily lose his way in those places and die of hunger or thirst before he can work his way out. But the Indians never get lost and never fail in their skill at reading the desert signs aright. Apparently this skill of man hunting is inborn and will never desert the tribe. Certain it is that the reservation Apaches of today, when called upon, can do as remarkable work as his brother tracker of the days of the savage Geronimo or Apache Kid.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

A LAND OF WONDERS.

The Sightseer Finds Many Things of Interest in California.

California has numerous natural bridges, caves, etc., of no little interest. The Mammoth Cave of Calaveras, discovered by miners in 1850; the Alabaster Cave; the Crystal Palace Cave, containing a number of attractive subterranean apartments, such as the bridal Chamber, the Chrystal Palace Room. Acrotus apartment called Music Hall, where the deposits of aqueous origin not only take the form of organ pipes, sounding boards etc., but emit, when struck, musical sounds and vibrations. Near this cave are two natural bridges which the tourist can visit and return to the railroad within half an hour. The only natural way to reach these scenes of interest is via "The Overland Limited, Route," comprising the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, now only one line. The only line running through trains to San Francisco from Omaha, its fast trains arriving sixteen hours ahead of all competitors. Pamphlets and maps describing the wonders of California, and full information about the most comfortable and direct route to the Pacific Coast, can be obtained of E. L. Loumax, G. P. & T. A. Omaha, Neb.

Public is Aroused.

The public is aroused to a knowledge of the curative merits of that great medicinal tonic, Electric Bitters, for sick stomach, liver and kidneys. Mary H. Walters, of 516 St. Clair Ave., Columbus, O., writes: "For several months, I was given up to die. I had fever and ague, my nerves were wrecked; I could not sleep, and my stomach was so weak from useless doctors' drugs, that I could not eat. Soon after beginning to take Electric Bitters, I obtained relief, and in a short time I was entirely cured." Guaranteed at Dicks drug store; price 50c.
