"Jail birds as a rule are not good songsters. But there is a marked exception to this rule in the Platte county jail. Never before in the history of Platte county have such sweet strains of vocal music floated through the barred windows of the jail. The source of this sweet music is a quartette of prisoners consisting of the two Browning boys, Jorgensen and Fout who will be tried in district court on various charges next week. These voices, though brought together by chance, harmonize like the voices of a trained quartet and the county officers have good excuse for being charmed from the routine of their office work.

District court will convene next Monday to take up the criminal cases on the docket. Among the cases of more or less general interest are the assault and battery case of the Browning brothers; the suit against Jorgensen for maintaining a house of ill fame; the rape case in which Fout is defendant; and the burglary suit against Harry Edwards, the young fellow from Butte, Mon., who last week got away with $20 worth of goods from the Burlington depot.

H. Hockenberger and E. H. Chambers returned last Thursday from their trip to Indian Territory and they are delighted with the conditions they found there from the investors point of view. So well pleased were they that Mr. Chambers will return in a few weeks to make more extensive investments. Concerning conditions of the red mar, Mr. Hockenberger made the following interesting statement to a Journal reporter: "We expected to find land prices lower. Land sells there from $15 to $40 an acre. We spent most of our time at Bartlesville where Louis Pollock lives and at Tulsa some distance south. These towns are both situated in the heart of the oil country and have made rapid growth along with the development of the oil wells. Tulsa has grown to a city of 8000 people within four years and Bartlesville has grown as rapidly. There are no "Omahas" in the Territory but there are more cities of from 3000 to 10,000. These cities have regular municipal organization the same as the cities in the states and you find in them the same business development, public utilities and sanitary conditions. But in the farming country it is different. The one crying need is statehood. Under territorial government the people cannot levy taxes to build roads and schoolhouses. And without good roads and good schools in the country, the best class of farmers will not enter. Another very serious handicap to the country is the breaking up of the farms into small tracts as a result of Indian ownership. The government has refused to permit the Indians to sell more than 120 acres out of each 160 acre allotment. Therefore the only means by which a settler can secure a quarter section is to buy 120 acres and lease the other 40 acres for five years. Some of the Indians prefer to live on their 40 acre tracts. Of course all improvements on the leased land remain there at the termination of the lease. Naturally therefore, the improvements are cheap and unsubstantial and they make the country look uninviting to people who are accustomed to see the well improved Nebraska farms. Many of the Indian holders are only one thirty-second part Indian, some of them occupy high places in social and professional life, and they want the government restrictions removed to enable them to sell their land. One of the leading lawyers and one of the leading doctors of Tulsa are one sixteenth part Indian and they are proud of the fact. As soon as statehood is secured and the Indian restrictions removed, this country will go forward with leaps and bounds. For the land will produce everything that Nebraska land will produce with cotton and fruit added. And with an unlimited supply of oil and an abundance of natural gas for manufacturing purposes, the new state promises to be one of the wealthiest in the United States."

The Kansas City "Journal" says of "Dora Thorne": "If those who are regular attendants of the Gillis want to enjoy a melodrama that has much that is of true dramatic worth and given by a company that bring out the production in a most interesting manner, they will do well to see 'Dora Thorne' adapted from Miss Clay's novel of the same name. The piece has one tragic situation, the murder of 'Lord Earl', which occurs early in the play. But is forgotten in the events that crowd one another and go to make up one of the best constructed and interesting stories that has been presented at the Gillis. Take a melodramatic audience, especially a Sunday audience, and a play that does not contain a dozen thrills in at least three acts, comes pretty near losing attention. The play is full of good lines that strikes home, has a lot of excellent business and the situations and climaxes are well brought out. Strange to say it did not take any buzz-saw acts, or train robberies or even the timely arrival of a Hawkshaw to awaken the demonstrations of approval which were generously given. The cast and production are far above the average. At the North Opera house, Wednesday December 13th.

C. J. Gorlow sued Mrs. Emma McAllister for an attorney's fee of $25 in county court Tuesday. The plaintiff claims that he earned the fee in assisting Allen & Reed to resist a divorce suit brought several years ago by Steve McAllister against the defendant. The defendant declared that Mr. Gorlow "batted in" and that she never employed him. Mrs. McAllister tried her own case. The jury found for the plaintiff and assessed the amount at $10.

Mrs. A. C. Boone returned Saturday evening from Firth, Neb., where she attended a family reunion. There were 12 children and their parents, and 21 grandchildren present. She reports an enjoyable time.
