Devonshire Superstitious.

Superstitions still rife in Devonshire are that it is unlucky to put the right boot on first; that the first foot to cross a threshold in the new year must be that of a man; that ill luck follows the spilling of salt on the tablecloth and the crossing of tableknives. These are only a few of many similar minor beliefs.

Luxury and Crime.

A recent English robbery case which reads almost like one of the Sherlock Holmes stories related to the detection of a thief through his fondness for flowers.

The only clew left by the robbers of a house near Northampton was a fragment of a flower, whose petals were scattered over the floor. No flowers of the same sort were grown in the garden of the house robbed or by the neighbors, but an investigation of the floral shops in the nearby town showed that a flower of that sort had been purchased the evening before by a man who was recognized from the description given to be a well known

At the trial it was shown that, although the night had been warm, the thief, who was of delicate health, had worn a light overcoat, which crushed the petals of the flower beneath, and these had fallen to the carpet when he had opened his coat to stow away the jewels which constituted the greater part of the spoils.

Although the clew was a slight one it was correct and the luxury loving crook will have no need of flowers to decorate his broad arrow suit for some time to come.
