on the issues of the republican plat-

W. J. Bryan's assault upon Roger Sullivan may have raised Bryan per sonally in the eyes of the public but it has been pretty hard on the democratic party. As the case now stands, the democrats of Illinois have proved conclusively that they want Bryan for his oratory and Roger for his grafting propensities.

The disavowal of Bryan's government ownership theories by the leading democrats of the country ha proved conclusively that government ownership, if it comes, will come from the hands of the republican party. And any student of history should have forseen this. How could state's rights democrat be reconciled to the centralization implied in government ownership.

The Journal wants to put this ques tion straight to its democratic and populist readers: Now, honest, did not the last republican state convention make the kind of platform, and name the kind of men that you hoped the democratic and populist conventions would make and name? And don't you feel it in your bones that Sheldon and a republican legislature would do more clean, honest, effective work on rate regulation and other questions important to you, than would Shallenberger and a democratic legislature put up and dominated by such men as Edgar Howard and P. E. Mc-Killip?

Who is a Demagogue?

A political campaign is upon as District Attorney Jerome has opened but the wheels are struck until a definition is established. At a time when the woods seen full of leaders Mr. Jerome remarks that " Real load ership is nowhere in sight, and what passes for leadership seems to consist of demagogic demandiation of existing conditions." No campaign what "demagogie" means. The dictionaries are easy. There the demaagogue is originally a person who sways the people by oratory or permansion : then an unprincipled orator who endeavors to curry popular favor by pandering to their prejudices or wishes. There was one William Travers Jerome who last fall made whirlwind campaign for district attorney in New York city, and made many votes by playing upon the men who had been caught tampering with life insurance funds.
