Occasionally one conf in contact with a number of ladies who are oh more interesting than their husds. They know more outside of the sordid and dull business of moneymaking. I know a farmer and his wife, writes a correspondent of Montreal Herald, who hardly seem to live in the same world. The farmer is a nice fellow, but his interest in things is bounded by the fences of his farm, with a hazy-eyed look occasionally at party politics. His wife, on the contrary, is an intellectual force in the neighborhood. She has made reading of the better sort popular within her sphere of influence: and there are few subjects of human interest upon which she has not formed an intelligent opinion. It is not that her original education was any better than her husband's; but that she has had more time since to supplement it, or at all events has taken more time. In many cases it is opportunity which gives the wife the better educationthe higher culture. The husband is so busy manipulating stocks or handling his business that he has no time or mental force for the study of art, the reading of good literature or the cultivation of a musical taste. His wife, on the other hand, is put by his efforts in so happy a financial position that she enjoys considerable leisure; and she spends it on mental culture instead of taking an empty course of "afternoon functions" and keeping up to the latest thing in fashinterested and interesting touching continent, while their husbands will brary.
