The whole country is not aware of the fact that Judge Landis issued a warrant for that Rocky Johnfellow. The big, bad man! And the whole world expected something to drop when Johnny was cornered. The sherriff found Johnny enjoying himself in Wisconsin, visiting a triend, and when thd sherriff handed him the warrant. Rocky John said "he'd be there," and the people know that's just what any other citizen would say. But the people have been deceived. Johnny D. says he isn't in the Standard Oil business any more, and knows nothing about it, only in a general way. People mid Rocky John raised the price of oil whenever he made a big gift. AFTERMATH.

Everybody in Columbus had a good time the Fourth. If they didn't they have no one to blame but them low neck, short sleeves then next selves. The big boys shot off firecrackers and threw confetti in the girls' faces. The big girls bought some little sticks with rooster feathers on the end and tickled the big boys in the face. They also threw confetti and had a big time. Some of the middle aged indulged in the fun and other big boys carried little whips with ribbons on, the more ribbion the better. Oh yes, and the big girls got little tiny rubber balls with a long string of rubber attached to them and they would hit the big boys any old place in the back. Late at night while the games we running high a violent storm broke suddenly upon the sea. When the wind s'ruck the Vigilanca a rudder broken and she whirled round and round and then dipped down into the hollow of a mighty wave. The shock was unexpected and in a mo soldiers were experiencing all horrors of a storm at sea. The negroes grabbed up thedice and loose change and huddled together like cattie, some of them moaning and others too frightened to utter a sound.

The storm raged for an hour, the soldiers thinking that every moment would be the last. Fortunately there was a negro preacher on board, the Rev. John L. Waller. It was for him to rise to the occasion. He gathered a crowd of negroes around him and spoke thus:

If we want to be saved let's pray." Then he dropped down on his know and his voice was heard praving above the noise of the storm.

The soldiers joined with the preacher in his prayer. In a short time lamentations, moans and promises could be heard on every hand. It was revival meeting in earnest. Nearly very one of the 800 soldiers was either singing or praying. The whole get tired and then get rested again .regiment was "converted" in a very few minutes.

But the rough sea continued. The blored preacher felt that something further must be done. An inspiration came to him: there must be a sacrifice of some kind.

The suggestion had only made. The dice were tossed into the angry waters, about 500 pairs. Some of the negroes also threw in the money which they had won with the dice. In half an hour after the dice were given to the sea the storm abated.

The Rev. Mr. Waller held religiou services at frequent intervals during the rest of the voyage. They were always well attended. At each meeting he told his hearers that the prayers of the righteous had saved the wicked. Then he urged them all to remain steadfast

Nothing was said about crap shooting during the rest of the voyage Shortly after the soldiers landed in Cuba there was a pay day. Then it was that a "backslider" tried to borrow some dice, but not a single pair could be found in the regiment; they had all been consigned to the sea. This was a condition that could not last.
