THE EXTRA SESSION

UNDER THE CALL IT CAN DO ANY BUSINESS IT DESIRES.

PROBABLY PASS CENSUS BILL

This Matter, the Statehood Bill and Other Measures Are Likely to Be Considered.

Washington, D. C.—When congress meets on the 15th inst., upon the call of the president to consider a revision of the tariff, there will be no constitutional restrictions upon the nature of the business that may be transacted. It is generally conceded that at least two months will be required for the representatives to conclude consideration of all the schedules involved in this legislation. The house itself will not receive the bill for some weeks, as the committee on way and means will require considerable time to report the measure. During this long period the senate will have nothing to do in respect to the tariff, and even after the bill leaves the house it will be in the hands of the committee on finance for some time before the senate actually gets possession of it, and the debate begins. Then will begin a long wait by the house of representatives until the state amendments can be known and conferees appointed to bring about an agreement upon them.

This procedure will result in each house having to remain in session with nothing to do in relation to the tariff covering a period of a couple of months. Three days is the extent of a recess that may be taken by either body.

In view of the extended period of inactivity that would face each house should nothing be considered except the tariff, many senators are considering the advisability of entering upon other legislation which they believe ought to be passed in time to send it over to the house when that body has disposed of its bill and will only have to wait for senate action on the tariff. The advocates of postal savings banks have talked of the possibility of such a policy being adopted ever since they became aware of their inability to secure legislation in the last session of congress.

There are many earnest advocates of a change of date in the inauguration from March 4 until a later day, when favorable weather is likely to prevail. Senator Dewey took the first legislative step in favor of such a change when he introduced a resolution proposing an amendment to the constitution to change the date of the inauguration from March 4 to the last Wednesday in April.

Advocates of statehood for New Mexico and Arizona were greatly disappointed that no progress could be made toward the enactment of an enabling act during the last session and they are restless over any proposition to delay action until the regular session of congress because they fear that the mass of legislation that will then come up will crowd their claims to the background.

The president's veto of the census bill make mandatory some action to provide for the enumeration of the thirteenth census, and while legislation might be delayed until early next winter, some of those who are interested in the passage believe that the extra session would give an admirable opportunity to dispose of it.

STORM KING RULES

TAFT INAUGURATION

INDUCTION OF NEW CHIEF OF NATION INTO OFFICE IN SENATE.

ELEMENTS SMASH PROGRAM

Oath Administered in Chamber of Upper Branch of Congress Instead of on East Portico of Capitol Building as Previously Planned by Committee on Arrangements—Sherman Sworn in as Vice-President—Bad Weather Interferes with Parade and Disrupts All Plans of New Chief Executive.

Washington. — President William Howard Taft's first move at the special session of congress will be to cut the weather man off the payroll.

Mr. Taft became President Taft Thursday afternoon at 12:55, the inaugural ceremony being held in the senate chamber, instead of on the east portico of the capitol building, on account of a terrific snow and sleet storm which raged here for nearly 24 hours. And the day before the weather man had predicted sunshine.

Washington for nearly 12 hours had been cut off from all wire communication with the rest of the world because of the sleet storm which followed on the heels of a fall of several inches of snow.

But for all that the ceremony was carried out in the crowded senate chamber in a manner which was as solemn as the inclement weather conditions would permit. But the program which had previously been laid out for the inaugural folk to follow was smashed, disrupted and thrown aside with the result that the time-worn adage of "bright sunshine for inaugural day" was cast into the Taft waste basket.

A few minutes before President Taft took the oath of office in the senate chamber Vice-President James S. Sherman was inducted into office. This process took but a few minutes, and then there was a solemn parade of senators, representatives, government officials and others interested in the ceremony.

The ceremony is formal. The inauguration was accomplished with all due formality and finally, but under most unusual conditions owing to the terrific blizzard which swept over the national capital, paralyzing street traffic, destroying communication with the outside world, and bringing dismay to the thousands of assembled visitors who had gathered in expectation of the usual spectacular demonstration. Notwithstanding the adverse conditions, efforts were made to carry out all of the main features of the inauguration.

The main change was in modifying the original program so that the inaugural address, usually delivered from the east portico of the capitol, was pronounced by Mr. Taft in the senate chamber.

"Blizzard to the End." When Mr. Taft and President Roosevelt met in the breakfast room, Mr. Taft's greeting to the man he was so soon to succeed, was: "Mr. President, even the elements protest."

"Mr. President-elect," quickly rejoined Mr. Roosevelt, "I know there would be a blizzard clear up to the minute I went out of office."

Notwithstanding the fury of the storm outside, there was happiness and cheer inside the White House up to the moment that Mr. Taft and President Roosevelt started for the capitol. Vice-President Fairbanks and the entire membership of President Roosevelt's cabinet had arrived by a quarter of ten.

Good Newspaper's Influence. The influence of the right kind of a newspaper must be corrective. Evils and abuses, some small, some great, grow up on every hand. The rights of individuals and the rights of the public are constantly being undermined through ignorance, and assailed by graft and greed. The newspaper with a helpful policy must ever be vigilant to warn and ready to fight against these attacks.—From the Philadelphia North American's "Confessions of a Newspaper."

The Missing Nine. The humorous aspects which serious things often take, by reason of some coincidence or happening, was well illustrated not long ago in a New England college. The baseball nine of this college had gone to a neighboring town on Saturday afternoon to meet a university nine, and had come back with the discouraging report of "no runs."

The college was feeling sore and subdued when it assembled on the following morning for chapel services, and the tension of the situation was not relieved until the preacher, not perceiving the significance of his words, in view of the record of the afternoon before, announced that he should preach on the text: "Where are the nine?" Then there was an audible snicker throughout the chapel, and everybody felt better.

No Money Could Buy It. Did any one ever hear of a mother wishing to be paid for her love?—Friedrich Nietzsche.

President Roosevelt and Mr. Taft left the White House at 10:10 a. m. on their journey to the capitol. As he came out of the front door Mr. Roosevelt bade good-by to the various officers and attendants who were gathered on the portico. Mr. Taft followed. The president was first to enter the carriage, taking the right hand seat.

Wind Destroys Decorations. The wind thrashed many of the city's prettiest decorations to threads. The immense reviewing stands along the line of march were made well-nigh uninhabitable by the swirling snow. Street car and railroad traffic were impeded to the extent of seriously delaying the arrival of thousands who had planned to attend the inaugural ceremonies.

President-elect and Mrs. Taft spent last night at the White House as the guests of President and Mrs. Roosevelt.

"I always knew it would be a cold day when I was made president of the United States," was the laughing remark of Mr. Taft as he looked out of the White House windows on one of the prettiest winter pictures ever seen. The snow, clinging to the trees and shrubbery, had transformed the White House grounds into a veritable fairyland of dazzling white and fantastic forms.

Parade Despite Elements. Despite the storm conditions unusually previous efforts at decorative elevation of Mr. Taft and Washington was through with people eager to see the magnificent spectacle. All day Pennsylvania avenue was packed with the crowds.

The scene was one of constant movement and constant color. The red, white and blue floated from every flagpole and fell as drapery from every cornice. The inaugural committee succeeded this year in outdoing all previous efforts at decorative effect.

In the line of march leading from the capitol up Pennsylvania avenue, past the great treasury building and

White House there were nearly 4,000 regular troops and twice as many members of the National Guard of the different states and independent military organizations. The civic features of the parade were many. The trades, the professions and all kinds of business activities were represented by thousands of persons who came to Washington to do honor to the country's new chief civil.

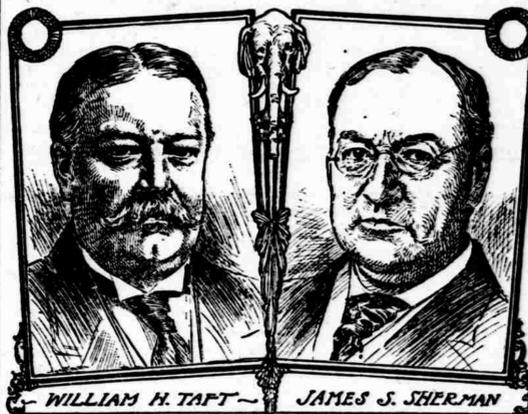

Sherman Sworn in First. Early in the day the president-elect met the out-going president in the White House. About an hour before noon the congressional committee of arrangements, consisting of Senators Knox, Lodge and Bacon, and Representatives Burke, Young and Gaines, arrived at the executive mansion and informed the president and the president-elect that congress was in readiness for the ceremonies of the actual inauguration.

Escorted by a guard of honor of veterans, Messrs. Roosevelt and Taft and the several committees then drove to the capitol, where they were met by Vice-President Fairbanks and Mr. Sherman. All went to the senate chamber, where, after prayer by Edward Everett Hale, chaplain of the senate, Mr. Sherman took the oath of office as vice-president and delivered his inaugural address. He then administered the oath to the newly elected United States senators.

Present on the floor of the senate chamber were many former senators of the United States, who have the privilege of the senate at all times owing to the fact of once having held membership in the body.

Taft is Made President. The white-haired chief justice of the United States, Melville W. Fuller, administered the oath of office in the senate chamber to Mr. Taft, who, when he had taken it, bent and kissed the Bible held in the hand of his country's chief jurist. Immediately following the taking of the oath, President Taft delivered his inaugural address.

The president's speech frequently was interrupted by applause and at its close the great assembly broke into cheers.
