Waterspouts.

A waterspout is a miniature tornado originating in a strong upward draft of air which occurs above the surface of a body of comparatively warm water. Its effect first becomes visible in a circular motion at the point in the clouds to which it ascends. This becomes a whirl, which condenses the vapor at its center, causing the portion of the cloud there to drop downward in the shape of a gigantic jelly bag. At the same time the continuing upward draft increases the rapidity of its original swirl and the condensed vapor caught within it until the ascending and descending masses join to form the waterspout. Necessarily by this process the air beneath the spout is rarefied, and thus where the phenomenon occurs at sea the water always seems to be sucked up into it, although this is not really the case to any considerable extent. For similar reasons where a waterspout or tornado passes over a building it does most of its damage by exhausting the air outside, causing what is within to expand and blow the structure to pieces.

The White Whale.

The white whale, or beluga, is an arctic cetacean and closely allied to the narwhal. It is pure white in color, twelve to eighteen feet long, whalelike in form, with a huge muzzle and numerous sharp conical teeth.

The white whale swims with extraordinary speed by doubling its huge tail under its body and then striking out with it. Scientists who have studied it in its natural environs say that it is able to catch the swiftest of fishes, often pursuing its prey far up the northern rivers. It is gregarious and may be seen at times in herds of forty or fifty.

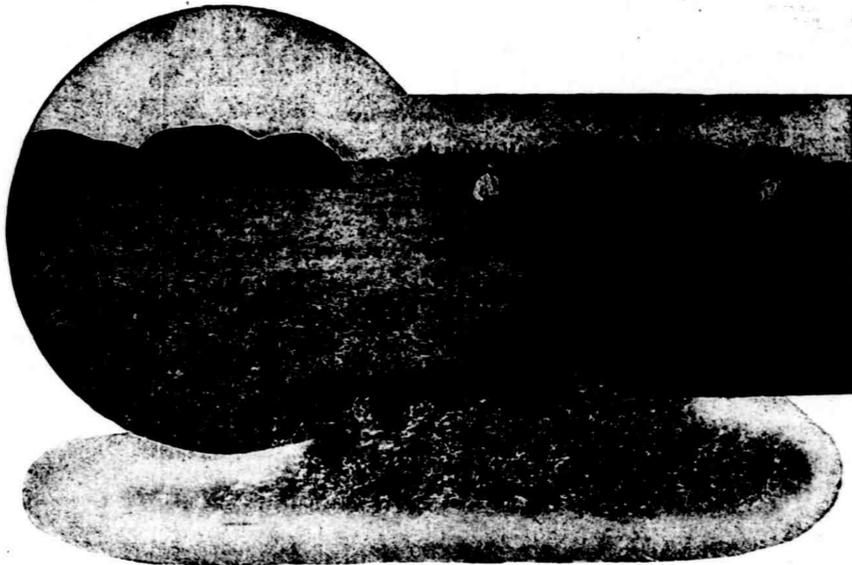

These herds not infrequently gambol around boats in the arctic seas, and the natives of Greenland often capture them with harpoons or nets. The flesh of the white whale, in fact, is a considerable source of food supply to them. From it also is derived one of the finest grades of commercial oil. The skins are tanned and the leather sold in the trade as "porpoise hide."—New York Times.

Sing a Song of Sixpence.

The London Globe attempts an explanation of the rhyme "Sing a Song of Sixpence." Here it is: "The four and twenty blackbirds represent the four and twenty hours. The bottom of the pie is the world. The top crust represents the sky. The opening of the pie is the dawn of the day, when the birds begin to sing, and surely such a sight is fit for a king. The king in his counting house counting out his money is the sun. The money the king is counting represents the golden sunshine. The queen, who sits in the parlor, is the moon. The honey she is eating is the moonlight. The industrious maid who is working in the garden before the sun has risen is the day dawn, and the clothes she hangs out are clouds. The bird that so tragically ends the song by slipping off her nose is the hour of sunset."

BUY A HOME NOW

Do you not feel a glow of comfort when you think of the old home of your childhood where for years you met with father, mother, brother and sister?

One cannot have a home that casts such a benediction over the life of his children unless he owns it. The renter is like driftwood tossed about from place to place and never knows how long he will be permitted to remain where he is. When a man owns his home there is something to live for. Every tree he plants and every nail he drives is a joy to him.

The great struggle of today is for better homes. Whether you are in the east, in the central states, or in the west, you will find men earnestly searching the maps for the location of certain sections of the country that have been recommended to them as favorably for improving their present conditions.

The passenger trains are crowded almost every month of the year with persons who are going somewhere in search of homes. Considering the cost of good land in the eastern and central states it is not surprising that so many are seeking the west, where the chances of prosperity are many times better than they are in the said eastern and central states. Among all the localities that are now open for investment there is none that surpasses western Nebraska. Land can be bought at such prices that one crop will pay several times the price.

The population is at present very scarce. It, however, is rapidly increasing. Not only is the deeded land becoming more thickly settled, but the government lands have all been taken up and contain thriving and prosperous farmers and stock growers.

There is No Time Like the Present

Now then, since the climate is good, soil productive, crops remunerative, rainfall abundant, water pure, and land values certain to rise, why not buy now? You have probably thought many times that you would go out and buy as soon as you could get away, but you have put it off time and again until you have practically forgotten about it. Did you ever stop to think that the man who acts quickly gets his profit from fellows who wait awhile? We have made scores of sales to men this year whom we asked last year to come out and buy for far less money. We will make scores of sales this coming year to men who could come and buy now for far less money than they will pay when they do come, simply because now is the time to buy.

We Have Several Special Bargains in Cheyenne County, Nebraska

We are making trips each week and on each trip we sell land. We would not sell this land if it did not fulfill the promises that we make for it. We know we have the values and we know our prices are right. Come in and talk it over, anyway.
