"Jim The Penman."

The coming appearance of Florence Roberts, Thulo Bergen and Theodore Roberts at the North Theatre on Thursday, November 2, in "Jim The Penman" will create great interest, as it is unusual at any time to see three Stars in a single production. Miss Roberts beyond question does the best work she has ever done. She is the Mrs. Ralston of the play, a woman who has been tricked by the fraud of Jim the Penman, to give up her lover to marry the forger, without knowing his infamy, to bear him two children and to become the mistress of his household of luxury, and the innocent partner of his villainously acquired position in society.

Toward the end of the play, she learns the truth and faces the husband who has tricked her, who has brought her face to face with misery. Miss Roberts' acting makes this the most poignant climax of the play. She makes the scene vibrate with naturalness and directness, and flings the thrill of reality across the footlights.

Mr. Roberts as Baron Hartford, the evil genius of Mrs. Ralston's husband, the man who has taught him how to be the expert forger he has become. The Baron is the arch plotter, the head of a mysterious band of criminals who achieve their fabulous crimes through the expertise of Ralston—the "Jim The Penman" of the melodrama's title. He is the personage who drives Ralston to make possible a theft of priceless jewels from his own son-in-law.

The role of the Baron is composed with the greatest care. It is perfect to the last detail. Mr. Roberts presents such a piece of character work as will not be seen in many a season. The Baron becomes possessed of just the right German accent; his cunning and his cynicism are insidiously convincing by consistent gesture, inflection and poise, and his smouldering wickedness and sinister nature are associated with mastery.

Mr. Thulow Bergen as "Jim The Penman" gives a force and dignity to the stronger scenes with the and Baron again with his wife, that has seldom been attained by any of our leading men of the present era, and makes the cunning and craftiness of the forger wonderfully realistic.
