

ter the university than to hold to a course made dry and impractical to the demands of this age. The American high school is the poor man's college. Let us make it abreast the times in every line of work.

Do not be over-ambitious to build up a High school with a four years' course in a small city or village. A good two or three years' course would be much better. Do not overcrowd the course. If you teach Latin, for instance, throughout the four years, or the three, you cannot expect to teach everything else. Do not give the high school more than its share of attention. Remember the grades below. It would appear to be an abnormal condition when one-third or one-fourth of the teachers in a city or village are engaged exclusively in high school work.

Many high schools of the state are giving an intellectual activity to their respective communities by a first-class lecture course. Horace Mann claimed that the lecture platform is the people's college. Yes, it is more, it is the larger pulpit. It is the noblest advocate popular education has ever had. It stands for ability, genius, education, reform, entertainment.

But whatever our course of study, whatever our plans, let us remember: "Knowledge does not comprise all which is contained in the large term of education. The feelings are to be disciplined; the passions are to be restrained; true and worthy motives are to be inspired; a profound religious feeling is to be instilled; and pure morality inculcated under all circumstances. All this is comprised in education."

And whatever our advice to our teachers, let us never forget to impress upon them the true nobility of our calling. "If we work upon marble, it will perish; if we work upon brass, time will efface; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust; but if we work upon immortal minds; if we imbue them with the just fear of God and love of our fellowmen, we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten to all eternity."

Yours for Education,
WILLIAM K. FOWLER,
State Superintendent.
