

"Are we to have a duplication of the history of England?" asks the Memphis Commercial Appeal (Dem.). "Is there to be a republican leader wise enough and bold enough to snatch the banner of tariff reform from the democracy and carry it to victory?"

"The republicans have us in a close place," concedes the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer (Dem.). "They have a winning hand, if they know how to play it. Congressman Babcock, of Wisconsin, and Director of the Mint Roberts are two of the ablest of republican politicians, and both are urging tariff revision. If the party comes to their views, the democracy may lose its long-unemployed and sadly neglected trump cards—tariff for revenue only and the opening of the markets of the world."

"A few fetich worshippers may cling to the absurd notion that the American people care nothing for foreign markets, but the farmers, the manufacturers, the workmen, appreciate the necessity of cultivating our foreign markets and disposing of the surplus resulting from our energy and unparalleled resources in every available corner of the world," reasons the Chicago Post (Rep.). "We cannot sell without buying. We cannot pile up heavy balances and demand gold in settlement. Trade is exchange, and there is no national patent on prohibitory tariffs."
