A SUGGESTION.

Paul Morton of the Santa Fe, writes the Globe as follows: "Let me suggest that you preach to your agricultural readers the importance of the cow and the hen. In making some investigation as to markets that might be secured outside of the United States, I was utterly amazed to ascertain from official sources that for the calendar year 1900, the United Kingdom (England, Scotland and Ireland) imported $84,922,542 worth of butter, and that only .0142 of it, less than $1,300,000 was exported from the United States. I also learn that the same countries imported over $26,000,000 worth of eggs, and the United States supplied less than 3 per cent of them. These figures are so important that it seems that they should be given wide spread circulation. I do not believe our farmers understand what a tremendous demand there is in Great Britain for butter and eggs, and how unresponsive our country is in supplying it. I understand that most of the butter used in England comes from Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Holland and Australia, and I also understand that it has to be packed in a particular way in order to interest the English trade. The people of Kansas are now abundantly able to improve the grade of their cows and chickens, and it seems to me that they ought to be kept posted on the opportunity there is to market these products." —Atchison Globe:
