Yesterday afternoon the first year students in Domestic Science were busily engaged in the mysteries of cooking cabbage without odor, as well as spinach. The reporter did not wait to see the highly hoped for success of such an operation. G. W. Bates, '03½, returned yesterday from South Dakota where he had charge of a party of men who were surveying the old Indian reservation. After shaking hands with his friends he left for the government headquarters at Omaha where he will be engaged till about Jan. 15th in plotting the notes obtained in the field during the summer. He says that he encountered some extremely heavy work in the sand hills; but at the same time it was spiced with enough variety to make things interesting. For instance, a north and south line, three miles long crossed a meandering river eleven times and ended on the top of a rocky bluff. Mr. Bates, who is a tall man could wade the river without wetting his collar, but his short and chunky back-flagman was fairly floating behind him. Mr. Bates expects to be back to school in the second Semester. _____

TUMBLE WEEDS.

Sioux City, Iowa, Oct. 21, 1901.

Mr. Dunroy:—

Are these poems REAL poetry? Most certainly, for they have come out of the heart of the poet, and the thought is the thought of the people and of the race. All come as a message, sometimes almost divine, out of the heart only to find a lodgment in the heart. That indefinable something which characterizes all true poetry and all divinely gifted poets is clearly found in Tumble Weeds.

Kindly yours,
WILLIS MARSHALL.
