About 150 periodicals are received regularly at the library. About one third of these stay at the central library and the remaining two thirds are distributed among the departmental libraries. Of the entire number 300 are foreign and 150 are American publications. English, French and German predominate among the foreign magazines, by far the greater number of which are of a scientific nature. All popular literary magazines, as well as many treating of prominent social and political questions, are kept on the shelves in the reading room.
