AROOSTOOK GIANT DEAD.

Feats of a Big Swede Who Has Jus-succumbed to Fever in Maine.

Aroostook county's giant, John Bros-trom of Woodland, is dead at the age of 32. Brostrom was a Swede, stood 6 feet 7 inches in his stocking feet and weighed, when in good health, 267 pounds.

There was not an ounce of fat on his huge frame. He was much the strongest man in northern Maine, and many stories are related of remarkable feats accomplished by him.

He once, by sheer strength, started a log jam that had for three days defied the efforts of twelve river drivers.
On another occasion he carried on his shoulder to the mill a hardwood log that would have been a load for four ordinary men, had it sawed into boards and carried the boards strapped to his back a distance of two miles to his home.

Brostrom could lift barrels of potatoes into a high wagon with less effort than most men make to lift a bushel, and his services were in great demand at the raising of barns. He would pick up the heavy timbers like so many light joists and place them in their proper position while the others were getting ready to lift.

When there was a fire his flail-like arms would bring down the brakes of the hand tub on one side faster than four or five of the firemen could lift up on the other side, and the small boys said that he was as good as a steamer.

A fever carried the giant off, and all Woodland and the other Swedish colonists mourned. He died in a second-floor room, and his casket was so long that it could not be carried down the stairs and had to be taken out at a window.

"Tumble Weeds."

"Tumble Weeds" is a collection of original poems by Will Reed Dunroy, the author of "Corn Tassels." While some of these poems have special reference to western life, most of them are upon themes as broad as humanity, and they give evidence of an unusual degree of poetic talent in the author. W. J. BRYAN, in the Commoner.
