Some criticism has been heard of the editorial in a recent issue of The Nebraskan regarding the riding of bicycles on the sidewalks about the university buildings. It is undoubtedly a fact that if the riding of wheels on the campus were prohibited a great injustice would be done to a majority of riders. Probably nine out of ten of those who ride wheels are discreet enough and use sufficient judgment to prevent accident. It is to control the one that bicycle ordinances are passed. The ideal regulation would be one to control the speed of riders, were this practicable. A little care, however, on the part of a few would obviate the necessity of any regulation at all.
