Yesterday's victory over Kansas on the diamond was but further proof of the strength of the team which Nebraska has sent forth this year. The members should be given a warm welcome on their return for the long list of victories which are dangling at their belts. The team has an enviable record, one of which it may be justly proud and the student body certainly appreciates the strength of its team.

Hon. A. J. Sawyer spoke feelingly upon the life and influence of the late J. Sterling Morton yesterday morning at the university. Mr. Morton was one of the early Nebraska settlers, he and his wife came to the state when Nebraska was still a wilderness, when Omaha had just been surveyed, and Lincoln had not been dreamed of. To many the prospect would have been anything but inviting, but to Mr. and Mrs. Morton there was a charm in the wilderness and they proudly took their places among the tillers of the soil, purchasing one hundred and sixty acres of land from the government near the site of old Fort Kearney. The home founded thus by their industry has entertained many noted men.

Mr. Morton was a college man, a contributor to the Detroit Free Press and the Chicago Times before coming to Nebraska, he was also an accomplished orator. His talents soon found ready scope in the great political questions arising in the new territory where he had come to make his home. Mr. Sawyer related many interesting anecdotes, illustrating the industry, truth and honesty of the Morton household.

COMPANY "Q."

The above named company will form Monday night north of the armory at eight o'clock. These are the orders in substance, read Wednesday evening at the close of drill.

All those familiar with university affairs will understand what this means, and those who have still to be informed will understand this is the annual "robe de nuit" parade.

Each cadet captain will form his company by instructions north of the armory. All cadets and all those who are not cadets will fall into line at the appointed hour equipped in white robes or white ducks.

This year the spring cadet fete will be conducted in a very methodical and orderly manner. Each captain will be responsible as much as possible for his company. The whole celebration will be done up in regular university style. The detailed program of action is not as yet completed.

IVY DAY PROGRAM.

Through some misunderstanding it was stated in the last issue that the seniors would hold their Ivy day on next Friday. The day set aside for the program is Wednesday, May 21st, at 2 p. m. As was said before, the program will begin promptly at the appointed time in order not to interfere with the baseball game which will be played that afternoon.

An attempt has been made to give a program which will vary somewhat from that of last year by adding new and interesting features. As yet the exact place of planting the ivy has not been fixed. It is the wish of the senior class to plant it at the library building. Many of the university professors concur in the view. Yet the superintendent of the grounds and buildings is not strictly in favor of this idea, having suggested the University building or Nebraska hall as the most suitable places for the ivy. The seniors are very anxious to place the ivy at the library building, and it is very probable that they will be successful in this. The program which will be given next Wednesday is as follows:

Music.....University Band
Class Song.....Miss Clare McPhee
Class Poem.....Mr. Ira Kellogg
Planting of Ivy...Mr. R. W. Harbor,
President '02.
Ivy Day Oration...Mr. Fred K. Nielsen
Response.....Mr. S. E. Black,
President '02.
Distribution of Prizes...Mr. O. C. Horne

George Kimball and Charles E. Wells will represent the local chapter of Phi Gamma Delta at the national convention of that fraternity to be held at Hotel Victory, Putin Bay, Ohio, next August.

The Pedagogical club held its last regular meeting last night in the Y. W. C. A. rooms. Professors Caldwell and Crabtree addressed the meeting. This is the last meeting before the one which will be held during commencement week.
