A very neat prospectus of the Lincoln Academy is being sent out to those interested. The work calls attention to the new management of the academy, and the features that will be introduced. Among these is the office of matron, the duties of which will commend itself to parents about to send their children away to school for the first time. Professor Hodgman has the hearty endorsement of all the heads of departments in the university, and in addition to these that of prominent educators and professional men and women from outside the university. The indications are now that the school will start the next year with an increased attendance and with more favorable prospects than ever before in its history.
