The action of one of the members of the senior class in circulating a petition against the wearing of caps and gowns by the boys on next Thursday was certainly very untimely and unwise. The question as to whether they should be worn or not has already been settled, and the conduct therefore, of the person instrumental in working up a feeling against the movement is somewhat rebellious. It is exceedingly unfortunate that every class should be hampered by the presence of someone who is ready to bolt and to thwart every progressive movement. Did the young man in question have any scruples against this movement, it was not compulsory for him to obtain the cap and gown, and this he could have done without any discredit to himself; but the fight which he has made on a movement well under way, is one which will not only tend to injure the good feeling in the class, but also reflect no honor upon himself.

As one member of the faculty said he hoped that no member of the senior class would throw himself in the way of so popular a custom as the wearing of caps and gowns.
