Notes of the Game.

How did it happen to be such fine weather?

It was colder in the grandstand than on the bleachers.

The Northwestern line was easy even if the men are big.

This ends a season unprecedented in Nebraska history.

Fortune smiled upon Nebraska in one or two instances.

One of the Chicago papers actually had a reporter in the press box.

Where were the colors when the band marched around the field.

The grandstand crowd was handled the best since the stand's construction.

"Chick" Shedd was warmly welcomed by his admirers as he rode onto the field.

It was discouraging for the men to lose by the umpire's decisions what they honestly gained.

The hue of the Northwestern colors brightened up the gridiron considerably.

And still some people, and even in the university, kicked on the price of admission.

We wonder if the man who swore so artistically learned it at the Methodist school.

Coach Hollister was surprised to see that there was as much civilization at the university.

The receipts were not as large as was expected. Indications pointed to an even larger crowd.

This was for the most part the farthest west the members of the team had ever come.

The man who owns the building north of the gridiron earned a neat sum by renting out standing room.

The World-Herald hit the point when it stated that Nebraska beat the Northwestern team and the umpire by 12 points.

Suppose the Nebraska men had all been in condition to play the game. Where would the Northwestern team have been then.

There was some difficulty in keeping certain persons in check during the game. Rooters will have to learn when to root and how to make others keep silent.

We venture to assert that quicker work in construction has never been witnessed in Nebraska than that done by the athletic board in building the bleachers.

Palladians Banquet.

The Palladians held their annual Thanksgiving banquet Wednesday evening, November 26, in Palladian hall. The old historical rug used for many years on similar occasions was brought out, inspected and pronounced in perfect order. A large number of alumni were present and incidents interspersed with wit and wisdom were related until the night watch put in his appearance. After the banquet an elaborate program was carried out. W. O. Jones, editor of the State Journal, and an ex-Palladian, officiated, at toast master.

The program was as follows:

Instrumental solo—Miss Clara Boose.

Quartet—Misses Calwell, Shimbur, Nelson and Hunting.
