

GREAT NAMES

When fast passenger train service across the continent was first adopted by the Union Pacific railroad, the first train was named "The Overland Flyer," a daily train; the second was named "The Golden Gate Special," a weekly train. These trains have given way to the great California train, "The Overland Limited," which runs every day in the year—the fastest and most superb train traversing the Western continent.

Only three nights from Chicago and only two nights from Missouri River points to California and Oregon via Union Pacific. Full information cheerfully furnished on application to

The sophomore class at Cornell is to be allowed to use the armory for its cotillion, providing it lives up to certain requirements laid down by the juniors. Restrictions are placed upon the second-year men as to the amount of money they are to spend on the supper and decorations, in order that the cotillion may not detract from the junior prom, which is the crowning event of the week.
