Fad for Burning Wreckage.

There are men scouring the sea-coast and harbors of this country all the year through in search of abandoned wrecks. If the wrecks are wooden vessels sheathed with copper, the men offer good prices for them, but if they are iron vessels, or merely unsheathed wooden ones, they are passed by. Wood sheathed or painted with copper gradually absorbs the copper, these wreckers say, and it is then admirable for burning in an open fireplace. It gives a green flame that is very beautiful, a flame which, sitting in the dark alone and gazing long in it, every man may behold his heart's desire. Naturally, such a wood is valuable.—Philadelphia Record.

 the room was necessary, which was accomplished only with considerable difficulty.
