

GREAT NAMES

When fast passenger train service across the continent was first adopted by the Union Pacific railroad, the first train was named "The Overland Flyer," a daily train; the second was named "The Golden Gate Special," a weekly train. These trains have given way to the great California train, "The Overland Limited," which runs every day in the year—the fastest and most superb train traversing the Western continent.

Only three nights from Chicago and only two nights from Missouri River points to California and Oregon via Union Pacific. Full information cheerfully furnished on application to
