The department of mechanical engineering has just received as an importation from Germany, through Elmer and Ammend, a complete Junker's calorimeter for the determination of the heating value of all gaseous and liquid fuels. This gives the department a very complete equipment for determining the heating value of all substances. Primarily, the Junker's calorimeter will be used in connection with tests of gas and gasoline engines, so that the exact heating value of the substance delivered to the engine can be determined, thereby making it possible to arrive at an exact determination of the thermal efficiency of the engine. The equipment is handsomely finished and well encased. This gives the mechanical engineering department such equipment for making the above tests as is equaled by relatively few engineering schools.

The state museum has just received from Mr. and Mrs. James Cook, of Sioux county, a collection of moss-agates from Agate, Neb., a postoffice on their large ranch, which lies along the Niobrara river. These specimens are among the best gem stones found in the state. They are next to the turquoise, which is not frequently found. The collection contains various colored moss agates as well as flint chips and arrow points made of agate.

Jay Amos Barrett, of the Historical Society, has prepared a number of maps illustrating the tables recently prepared by him for Professor Caldwell's American history seminary, showing the sources of Nebraska's population from 1854 to 1863. One set of maps is drawn to indicate the different states from which people emigrated to Nebraska, and another set to show the nativity of those who came from the old country. The making of these maps involves careful and painstaking work, and is being done in a skillful and artistic manner.

J. I. Mosbarger, of Lincoln, has presented the state museum with a collection of moonstones. The collection comprises about thirty specimens and was gathered by Mr. Mosbarger on his visit to Catalina Island, off the coast of California.

The library will take its commencement time vacation on next Monday evening, when the building will be closed to students. Saturday, daytime and evening, it will remain open as usual.
